Pa. social workers to return Monday

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — The early morning conference calls with Gov. Milton J. Shapp, the bitter fears of defeat and the days on the picket line are virtually over now.

Pennsylvania's social workers should be back on the job Monday.

The Pennsylvania Social Services Union and Pennsylvania Employment Security Employees Association have finally agreed to present a state contract offer to 12,000 members who have been on strike since July 1.

"We're telling our people that it's not the greatest contract we've ever seen, but that it's the best deal we can get for them," said Kim Fellner of PSSU. "We are saying it is probably wise to ratify the measure."

The unions' battle with the Shapp administration has been heated and frustrating. Some staff members were in tears when the negotiating team finally worked out an agreement, others were so angry they walked out of the PSSU headquarters in a dispute over part of the proposal.

The new contract would raise salaries by 12 per cent over two years — a flat 3.5 per cent hike now, with 2.6 per cent on January 1, 1976 and 6 per cent in July, 1976 — basically the same settlement other public workers got.

But it also includes a 6 cent an hour payment into the health and welfare fund now with 2 cents more in July. The union says that will enable it to set up a dental plan negotiators have been seeking for months.

Late Friday, the unions were printing 9,000 copies of the package to send to members across the state. The ratification vote should be completed late this afternoon.

The union members work in county welfare offices and in the 116 state unemployment compensation offices. Some of the offices could be opened Sunday if the ratification comes in time, according to Fellner.

The final proposal came during a hectic night of conference telephone discussions that involved Shapp, Lt. Gov. Ernest Kline and union officials, who were bolstered by Richard Murphy, a PSSU national leader who participated.

At first, it seemed the matter would be settled at 10 p.m. Thursday, when the union sent a state contract proposal to its members that would raise salaries by 11 per cent over two years, and recommended they reject it.

But in a midnight telephone call to Shapp, who was in Washington, the state came up with a better contract proposal, apparently because they had learned of the rejection recommendation.

PennDOT head orders building, repair cutbacks

HARRISBURG (UPI) — Transportation Secretary Jacob Kassab has ordered his district highway heads to make major reductions in their construction and repair programs to make up for $53 million cut from the PennDOT budgets.

Kassab has already begun to hint he may seek another gas tax hike from the legislature to help his department.

Kassab's department has been hit by severe cuts made in this year's budget because of a drop in income from the nine-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax and motor vehicle license fees, which are used exclusively to fund PennDOT operations.

"We're asking each of the 11 districts to cut their maintenance budgets by 36 per cent," Kassab said Friday. "It's the same thing every year, maintenance suffers whenever there is a tight budget."

The move will have an immediate impact on persons who rent highway equipment to the state and contractors who have done highway repair work.

Kassab has virtually eliminated the $12.5 million originally set aside in his budget for rental of snow removal equipment.

He also cut $10.2 million earmarked for highway resurfacing work done by private contractors and eliminated $3.3 million for bridge painting.

PennDOT had $418 million last year for its highway operations budget. It has $337 million for fiscal 1975-76.

The department has been hit hard by a slump in gasoline and new car sales.

For instance, the Revenue Department last year predicted income from gas taxes would be $239 million during the last six months of fiscal 1975. Income was actually $217 million — a $22 million drop.

Income from motor license fees was estimated at $141 million for the period between January and June. It turned out to be $133 million — an $8 million drop.

The estimates for the new fiscal year are just as gloomy.

Kassab said he will not know the impact the budget cuts will have on road repair until he gets reports from the 11 PennDOT highway districts.

Because of a penny-a-gallon increase in the gasoline tax approved last year, PennDOT was able to do major repair work on 1,700 miles of the 44,000-mile state highway system. However, the average during the last 10 years has been 1,200 miles of resurfacing each year.

Kassab said he expected the resurfacing to fall well below the 1,200 mile average in fiscal 1975-76, especially if the state has a bad winter and the snow removal costs soar.

People become alligators' bag

LAKELAND, Fla. (UPI) — Florida's "endangered" alligators not only are multiplying at a prolific rate, but seem to be picking up the unnerving habit of snapping at humans.

The Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission reported Friday there had been five gator attacks on people so far this year, as opposed to four in the record years of 1972 and 1973.

"The attacks have become much more frequent," said Capt. Grady Phelps of the game commission's south Florida regional office. "There are more people and more alligators and the gators are not nearly as scared as they used to be."

Thomas Chickene, 45, of Polk City, barely escaped with his life when he was attacked by a 12-foot, 600-pound gator while swimming in a lake at a Polk County Park June 16.

"We think maybe the gator was old, not able to catch food as well as he used to," said Phelps. "Here comes a nice, tasty morsel of about 200 pounds and he thought

Ratification predicted

Pact avoids rail strike

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Railroad and union negotiators averted a nationwide rail strike Friday by agreeing suddenly on what the union president called a "most satisfactory" labor contract.

"I have no question that this agreement will be completely ratified on Tuesday next week" when the union's general chairman gather in Washington, a delighted C.L. Dennis, president of the railway clerk's union, told reporters.

William H. Dempsey, chief railway management negotiator, said he was "pleased to bring this difficult and protracted negotiation to a conclusion. This, in our judgment, has ended well."

The breakthrough came at an unscheduled bargaining session called by W.J. Usery, the chief federal mediator who has been supervising talks in both the rail dispute and the continuing confrontation between postal unions and the Postal Service.

The rail talks had broken down in bitter disputes Thursday and the union had tentatively called a nationwide rail strike for July 28. Friday's talks turned that situation around suddenly and dramatically.

Union and management bargaining committees quickly approved the agreement reached by Dennis and Dempsey.

Calling the tentative contract "a most satisfactory agreement," Dennis said: "We are pleased that the railroad negotiators had the kind of heart necessary to bring this agreement about."

The only ratification necessary is by the general union chairman. No general membership vote is necessary.

"We didn't get a lot of things we initially asked for," Dennis said in discussing the contract agreement. Dempsey described the settlement as "reasonable, fair and rich."

They said the 117,000-member clerks' union won its demand for a cost-of-living adjustment effective on Jan. 1, 1978, at the end of the new contract's life.

The clerks also get the same wage and fringe benefits set out in pattern negotiations already concluded between the companies and seven other unions. These settlements call for a 41 per cent increase in wage and fringe benefits during the course of the three-year agreement.

The federal mediators also kept wage-contract talks going between Postal Service officials and four unions representing 600,000 postal workers.

A postal union leader predicted the Postal Service would soon present a complete money package but said union members might reject it and start preparing walkouts.

A Postal Service spokesman said Postmaster Benjamin Bailar might ask President Ford to call out the National Guard and Army reservists to help deliver the mail should postal unions begin technically illegal strikes when the contract expires Sunday at midnight.

The old rail contract also expires Sunday at midnight

Talks between the 117,000-member Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks and the National Railway Labor Conference broke down Thursday in rancorous debate. The bickering destroyed an optimistic atmosphere and union officials set the strike date.

A strike by rail clerks would likely shut down the railroads entirely, with devastating economic consequences, because other rail workers would honor picket lines.

The rail clerks have rejected a "pattern settlement" already accepted by other rail unions which would provide nearly 41 per cent increases in wages and benefits over three years.

In the postal dispute, some national union leaders expressed fears Friday that local leaders might start calling wildcat strikes if no agreement is reached.

Federal law forbids postal strikes and provides 45 days for fact-finding when contracts expire, followed by 45 days of compulsory arbitration.

Space 'team' proclaims new era

HOUSTON (UPI) — Proclaiming the birth of "a new era in the history of man," three Americans and two Russians ended 26 dramatic hours of flight as a single space team Friday with predictions that international crews would one day explore the planets.

Apollo astronauts Thomas Stafford, Vance Brand and Donald "Deke" Slayton said farewell to their "very good friends," Soyuz cosmonauts Alexei Leonov and Valeri Kubasov, 140 miles above the Indian Ocean at 5 p.m. EDT.

They sealed a tunnel connecting Soyuz with Apollo, packed up mementos of their historic efforts in the name of détente and science and settled down to spend their fourth night in tandem flight around the earth.

The ships were to part company today.

"We wish you the best of success," said Stafford, clasping Leonov's hand through the round docking tunnel hatch where their visit had started with a similar handshake 25 hours, 41 minutes earlier.

"I'm sure we have opened up a new era in the history of man. Our next meeting will be on the ground."

The five spacemen spent a busy day of work, play and diplomatic ceremony in the four rooms of their linked spacecraft. They held a televised news conference in space, dined together on shared space food and beamed down TV tours of their homelands far below for viewers around the world.

Stafford, back in Apollo, told Houston control it had been "a real long day." Houston replied with a "goodnight" message about 15 minutes early.

On earth, their wives waited with "happy anxiety."

Apollo and Soyuz were to remain linked together — a single space, machine 66 feet long — until 8:02 a.m. today.

Then, with a fond "dov-vidaniye" until we meet again), they were to pull apart and maneuver into separate no-collision orbits after final experiments to test their space rescue docking system and let Apollo create an artificial solar eclipse for the Soyuz crew to photograph.

In their final hours of flight as a joint crew, the astronauts and cosmonauts marked the end of their nations' arch rivalry in the space race by creating permanent memorials to the world's first international spaceflight.

Stafford and Leonov aboard Soyuz joined halves of a sliver disc brought up in their separate ships into a medal showing the linked craft on one side and the Soviet and American flags on the other. Slayton and Kubasov in Apollo did the same.

Leonov presented Stafford a red box of fast-growing pine seeds from the Soviet Union to be planted in the United States. Stafford gave Leonov white pine seeds from Wisconsin, Slayton's home state, to be planted in Russia.

They also melted gold and lead in a furnace into a uniformly mixed alloy, impossible to create in earth's gravity, so a totally new substance could symbolize "the success people and nations have found in putting aside their differences to work together in space."

Stafford's parting comment before he and Leonov swung shut hatches at each end of the docking tunnel echoed a sentiment first voiced by the Apollo commander during the space news conference, when he described how he would have greeted the Russian had communications conditions permitted it.

"The thoughts were that when we opened this hatch in space, we were opening back on earth a new era in the history of man," he said. "I would have said: V Kosmose My Otkrivayem Novuyu erv istorii chelovechestvo."

"Now how this new era will go depends on the determination, the commitments and the faith of the peoples of both countries and of the world. I'm sure it will work out in the future for good."

Leonov, standing beside Stafford, said Apollo and Soyuz were conducting the joint flight "because our people and our governments want to work together in a spirit of cooperation."

"This flight is an important step on the endless road of space exploration by the joint efforts of all mankind," he said.

Brand was asked whether the meeting between Americans and Russians in space on an international mission might pave the way for men of different nations to band together in joint missions to the planets.

"I think frankly the chances are very good," he replied. "But I don't think it will happen right away."

Socialists plow through Communists

Portuguese party protests clash

PORTO, Portugal (UPI) — At least 75,000 Socialists and their supporters overwhelmed fleeing Communist opposition Friday and chanted demands for democracy in Portugal's worst political crisis in 15 months of military rule.

The Socialists swept aside Communist roadblocks on two bridges leading into this northern city from Lisbon, then thronged into Antas football stadium in a direct affront to the ruling Armed Forces Movement.

It was the nation's biggest demonstration since the spring election campaign and despite its anti-military overtones, troops and police kept a low profile once the threat of serious clashes with the Communists disappeared.

"We are not against the MFA (Armed Forces Movement)," the opening speaker told the Socialist rally, "but we demand that they keep their promise to create a democracy."

"If we are not the people, who are we?" he yelled to the overflow crowd in the 50,000-seat stadium.

The crowd chanted back, "We want unity!" "We will overcome!" "The Socialist party has force!"

The threat of street violence diminished quickly when it became clear the Socialists far outnumbered Communists who had vowed to block roads to the city "cost what it may."

There were brief clashes on two bridges leading across the Douro river into Porto. Each time, Socialists hurled aside barricades and chased off Communist youths manning them.

About 4,000 Communists gathered in Porto's Liberty Plaza to chant anti-Socialist slogans, but they took care to keep clear of Socialist groups en route to the stadium. The poor Communist showing reflected a lack of support in the north, where anti-Communist rallies and incidents have been increasing over the past few days along with dissatisfaction with the Armed Forces Movement.

The Socialists, who with the Popular Democrats won 64 per cent of the vote in April as compared to 12 per cent for the Communists, planned another mass rally tonight in Lisbon.

The military government put the army on alert across Portugal as the country's simmering political crisis turned toward a weekend of potentially violent demonstrations.

The Communists set up a counterdemonstration 200 yards away from where Socialist militants were gathering to march to their rally.

Today is insurance deadline

STROUDSBURG — If you haven't gotten your no-fault insurance policy yet, you'd better get with it: Today is the deadline for the compulsory coverage.

In response to state Insurance Commissioner William Sheppard's plea, most of the local insurance agencies will be open at least half a day today, and many will be open all day, to handle those procrastinators who have yet to buy automobile insurance coverage.

Persons who fail to buy insurance are subject to a fine of up to $500, a six-month maximum jail term and will have their licenses suspended. Sheppard said there are an estimated one million uninsured drivers in Pennsylvania.

Pa. court deals blow to state land use control

HARRISBURG (UPI) — Commonwealth Court Friday dealt a major setback to environmentalists who want the state to take more control over local land use decisions.

The court overturned a ruling by the Environmental Hearing Board that had required the Department of Environmental Resources to consider the long-range impact a sewer line would have on an undeveloped area of Delaware County.

The original suit was filed by Mrs. Cyril G. Fox, a resident of Marple Twp., Delaware County, and an organization called Natural Lands Trust, Inc.

They charged that DER did not consider the long range environmental impact when it approved the sewer authority's request to install a sewer line that a capacity to handle 1.3 million gallons of sewage more than was needed.

The sewer line, they charged, would lead to commercial and residential development in an area that should be preserved for open space and recreation and that in the long run, the development would pollute Crum Creek.

The suit said that under the Environmental Bill of Rights in the Pennsylvania Constitution, DER was required to take these factors into consideration.

That provision says, "The people have a right to clean air, pure water and to the preservation of the natural, scenic, historic and esthetic values of the environment."

"Pennsylvania's public natural resources are the common property of all the people, including generations yet to come. As a trustee of these resources, the Commonwealth shall conserve and maintain them for the benefit of all people."

The Environmental Hearing Board, a panel of three attorneys that hears appeals of administrative decisions made by DER, agreed that the department should have considered the long range impact and revoked the permit.

The sewer authority appealed to Commonwealth Court and the court, in an unanimous decision, reversed the hearing board's ruling.

The opinion, by Judge Genevieve Blatt, suggested strongly that DER should leave land use decisions up to local governments because there are no state laws giving the department specific land use control powers.

The court said under the sewage facilities act, DER's function is merely to make sure that proposed sewage systems conform to local zoning and will not result in water pollution.

"It is the local government agencies who are responsible for planning, zoning and other such functions," the court said.

The court also said that although it was suggested that future development might cause water pollution, there was clear evidence that it would be minimized by other pollution control laws.

The court said the hearing board erred when it said that under the Environmental Bill of Rights, DER is supposed to supervise and-or coordinate local government planning.

Former British official returns from 'new life'

LONDON (UPI) — John Stonehouse, a former cabinet minister who faked his own death to start a new life abroad, returned to Britain Friday to stand trial on charges of fraud, theft, forgery and conspiracy.

Four Scotland Yard detectives guarded the 49-year-old member of Parliament and his 28-year-old secretary, Sheila Buckley, on the long flight from Melbourne, Australia, where he had borrowed the name of a dead man and sought to begin life anew.

Stonehouse and Mrs. Buckley were extradited from Australia on a total of 27 criminal charges and were expected to be arraigned today.

Stonehouse, who disappeared in Miami Beach, Fla., last November and made it appear he had been drowned, was spotted and captured in Australia not long afterward.

A one-time minister of aviation, Stonehouse sought permission to stay in Australia as a migrant and said he had engineered his disappearance to free himself from business and blackmail pressures.

"I considered quite wrongly that the best action I could take was to create a new identity and attempt to live a new life away from these pressures," Stonehouse told British Prime Minister Harold Wilson in a vain attempt to avoid extradition.

Scotland Yard gave Stonehouse a London airport reception far removed from those normally accorded members of Parliament.

A fraud squad chief met the flight and boarded immediately to caution Stonehouse and Mrs. Buckley that anything they said could be used against them.

Then Stonehouse, Mrs. Buckley and the Scotland Yard officers, two of them women, climbed into three cars parked at planeside and sped through the airport's cargo tunnel toward downtown London.

Alternative to bankruptcy?

New York ponders layoffs

NEW YORK (UPI) — In a desperate attempt to head off bankruptcy, New York City Friday pondered drastic measures including another 27,500 layoffs, a wage freeze and salary cuts for its remaining workers.

The new proposals before the City Council Finance Committee came as Mayor Abraham D. Beame discarded a recommendation for $32 million in nuisance taxes in an attempt to rejuvenate business community interest in bonds to bail out the city. It had been designed to save 3,000 jobs.

Beame, in dropping the attempt to raise revenue with taxes on business ranging down to shoe shines and haircuts, said he was doing so "in the hope it will bolster confidence and improve market conditions."

Thrown on the table for discussion as money raising alternatives were a subway fare hike above the current 35 cents and even elimination of free tuition for City University students.

The Municipal Assistance Corporation — "Big Mac" — set up by the state to issue bonds to aid the city in its crisis, met to consider the dilemma of whether to issue more bonds while $50 million of the $1 billion it has issued remained unsold in underwriters' vaults because of sagging investor interest.

Leaders of the garbage men's union, already in court to try to force the rehiring of 1,434 workers dismissed for the second time in a month Friday and another 750 to go at the end of the month, threatened to sue the city for the $1.6 million the union put up to temporarily secure the jobs.

Amin's African unity: 'Destroy South Africa'

KAMPALA, Uganda (UPI) — President Idi Amin opened a meeting of the Organization of African Unity Friday with a call for the destruction of South Africa, by widespread warfare if necessary.

In a one-hour speech that was one of the loudest ever delivered to a meeting of the organization, Amin also called for the creation of a single African army to fight white minority regimes such as South Africa's, the total economic isolation of the Pretorian regime and its expulsion from the United Nations.

The two-week conference, called to try to solve Africa's major problems, also admitted four new member states on the first day—Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe, Cape Verde and Comoros which declared unilateral independence from France on July 6. There are now 46 members of the organization.

Tanzania, Zambia and Botswana, the three most vocal opponents of the Amin govern-

Housing boss predicts gloom

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Housing Secretary Carla A. Hills Friday predicted another year of sluggishness in the homebuilding industry and said any congressional effort to stimulate a dramatic upsurge could lead to "havoc."

Mrs. Hills resisted at a hearing of Congress' Joint Economic Committee when Sens. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., and Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., asked her for written guidance on what legislation and appropriations would be required to get homebuilding activity to where it stood two years ago.

She said the industry had to be "nudged" out of its "depression."

"I see that not as leading to a long-term recovery," she said of Javits' proposal for heavy federal stimulation. "It could create havoc in the future. I regard that as a dangerous program."

"Bunk," replied Javits.

Humphrey reminded Mrs. Hills the Constitution provides that Congress set national policy and the administration carry it out. He said it wasn't her place to resist.

The exchange occurred after Mrs. Hills predicted that home construction starts, which averaged 2 million a year from 1971 to 1973, would climb only gradually over the next 12 months.

Home construction usually leads the economy out of a recession. But this recession is "different," Mrs. Hills testified, citing a lack of consumer confidence and still-high interest rates.

The industry was dismayed Thursday when the government reported that housing starts fell to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.07 million in June.

What's news

House drops sex bias rule

WASHINGTON — The House Friday dropped its demand that physical education classes and professional honorary societies be segregated by sex in federally aided schools and colleges.

The action came as the House passed and sent to the White House a $7.9 billion appropriations measure to fund public grade and high schools and college aid programs for the 15 months that started July 1. The bill faces an almost certain veto because it exceeds President Ford's requests by $1.5 billion.

Consumer agency jurisdiction cut

WASHINGTON — The Senate voted Friday to deny the Consumer Product Safety Commission jurisdiction over pesticides, tobacco and ammunition. The restraints were included in legislation which would authorize $120 million for the commission's work through Sept. 30, 1977. The bill passed by a vote of 76-8 and went to the House. It would revise the commission's mandate specifically to eliminate tobacco and tobacco products from the "hazardous substance" provisions of its charter.

Ford will see Solzhenitsyn

WASHINGTON — Russian dissident writer Alexander I. Solzhenitsyn has an open invitation to visit President Ford in the White House, Press Secretary Ron Nessen said today. Nessen told a news conference Ford made an appointment to see the Nobel Prize-winning author at the White House last Tuesday afternoon but the Russian had to beg off because he was attending a Senate reception in his honor, Nessen said. Nessen said Ford's open invitation to Solzhenitsyn was not a repudiation of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, who recently advised the President not to see Solzhenitsyn because of the writer's anti-Soviet views.

Murder charge dismissal asked

RALEIGH, N. C. — Defense attorneys requested Friday that murder charges against Joan Little, a 21-year-old black woman, be dismissed on grounds lie detector tests had borne out her story that she killed a white jailer while fighting off a rape attempt. Her attorneys said in a motion filed with Superior Court Judge Hamilton Hobgood that she was given lie detector tests within the past 30 days by two polygraph specialists. The attorneys said the defense was to arrange for two of the tests, which it had done, and that Griffin was to have arranged for the state to administer the third test, but had not done so. Judge Hobgood gave Griffin until Monday to respond to the motion.

Canning lid complaints hit state

HARRISBURG — Agriculture Secretary James A. McHale said Friday his department is receiving 200 complaints a week from across the state about a shortage of canning lids. McHale said the department's Consumer Services Division is investigating the shortages, which have occurred even though more lids are being sent to the state than in previous years. "I think something smells rotten," McHale said, "otherwise our mail load from anguished citizens would not be that heavy." McHale noted that the shortage apparently involves only lids, not canning jars. "In fact, our reports show that manufacturers fear being stuck with a surplus of jars," he said.

Brazilian train toll at 14

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — Hundreds of firemen, police and soldiers dug through tons of twisted wreckage Friday, looking for more victims of a train derailment in which at least 14 persons died and 340 were injured. Police arrested several persons caught looting the scattered belongings of the victims. The Rio de Janeiro Railroad Authority said 11 persons died at the scene of the accident Thursday and another three died in a hospital later. Forty of the injured are still in the hospital, 12 of them in serious condition.

Argentine economy head quits

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — Celestino Rodrigo buckled under pressure from militant labor leaders and resigned Friday, but the government denied reports that embattled President Maria Estela Isabel Paron was about to go on an extended leave of absence. Rodrigo, who lasted only 45 days in office, said in a resignation letter he was leaving to facilitate the final decision of the president about the political and economic policies the country will follow in the near future. His drastic austerity program, including wage rollbacks coupled with two devaluations of the peso, led to a nationwide general strike last week that shut down the country for two days and forced the government to reinstate wage increases of as much as 160 per cent.

Bubbly awaits conference finale

GENEVA — Celebration champagne was on ice and ready Friday as delegates from the 35 nations at the European Security Conference put the finishing touches to a final document. Most country Switzerland said it prepared the champagne for when the final I's are dotted and T's crossed. Last-minute problems were practically cleared up Friday, conference officials said, and the final 110-page document will be ready for signing at the summit in Helsinki July 30.

No energy crisis at Saylorsburg playground

SAYLORSBURG SLIM — Chris Neil, 7, lines up a winning shot to the corner pocket. Like all great pool players, Chris knows aiming is all in how you confort your face over the cue ball.

SAYLORSBURG — A group of 10 kids leap up and down excitedly as a member of their team wallops a huge red rubber kickball and makes it to first base safely, while only a few feet away the sliding board is the main attraction for the younger children.

Inside the main pavilion a group of energetic young boys, ages 7 and 8, match their pool-shooting talents on a miniature billiard table set up on the floor, while some of the more creative youngsters try their hand at making construction paper beads for a bracelet at the arts and crafts table.

That was the scene this week at the Saylorsburg Playground, as more than 50 children turned out for the first summer recreation program sponsored for children in Ross Township and Hamilton Township.

The Saylorsburg Playground Association, in conjunction with the Monroe County Recreation and Park Commission, is running the four-week program (July 14 to Aug. 8) free of charge for children from ages 5 to 14.

Held Monday and Friday from 9:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m., the program consists of organized play and games, arts and crafts and a weekly contest day.

The program is still open for children in either Ross or Hamilton Townships.

The program is the brain child of Denise Kelly of Saylorsburg, a junior at Pleasant Valley High School who is active in field hockey. Since mov-

She said there were so many children who had nothing to do that she decided to try to provide a recreation program for them. The Saylorsburg Playground Association has provided the funds for sports equipment and for the daily cold drink that is given to the children.

Denise is serving as coordinator of the program free of charge. Local resident and father Dale Eckman and Charlotte Houchin, a biology teacher, are also helping with the daily program on a volunteer basis.

Supplementing the sports and games, the Monroe County Recreation and Park Commission is providing an arts and crafts program for the children on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays. Members of the commission helping in this area are Michelle Santangelo, Debbie Lawrence and Jere True. The county commission is also providing movies for the children one day a week.

It is expected that as the program continues, more children will be enrolled, but all the adults working at the playground said they were pleased with the initial turnout.

No comments on the program were forthcoming from area parents as yet, but Sean Egan, 8, seemed to sum up the feelings of the other kids at the playground this week when he whispered to his five-year-old brother Kevin, "Gee, I didn't think this was going to be this much fun."

Up Milford way

No detente for MIAs

By NORMAN B. LEHDE

Last Sunday a dozen families, who are members of the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, assembled in Milford for the dedication of a Freedom Tree. The tree was planted in honor of a Milford youth, Sgt. Edwin Jack Pearce, missing in Laos since 1972.

These families are composed of "ordinary people." People whose sons were ordinary boys: delivering newspapers and becoming Boy Scouts, joining churches and lodges, taking part in sports and falling in love. The event that was to set all their lives apart was the American involvement in Vietnam.

While spokesmen for the group still express a belief in the nation's involvement in Southeast Asia, the families now find themselves a minority group representing a vivid reminder of something the nation desires to forget.

Government policy once enlisted their sons in the crusade against Communism, regarded by some as the satanism of our time. Now the emphasis is on detente. Last Sunday, George Brooks, a leader of the League of Families, expressed the belief that the President of the United States choose not to meet 'with representatives of their group for fear of upsetting detente.

They find the Montgomery Resolution, which would create a Congressional investigative body to research the MIA situation, although backed by both liberals and conservatives, stalled in committee. They learn that missing men may be used by Vietnamese leaders as pawns to force financial aid to a devastated country. Aid promised in a treaty which did not mention prisoners in Laos or Cambodia.

These are people whose requests for information have been rebuffed by both the Vietnamese government and their own. Ironically, frustrations in dealing with their government have led to disillusionment and bitterness akin to that of those who opposed the American involvement in Southeast Asia.

What keeps them going? Many have deep religious convictions and an almost mystic belief that their sons are still alive. In their common anguish they have built up a companionship that sustains the individual as well as the group.

They feel their sons served the nation, did what the government asked of them. Does not the government owe them every effort to determine if those sons are dead or languishing in some obscure prison as a result of that service? Will there be an answer for these families whose lives were changed forever by conflicting ideologies in a distant country?

Area woman joins workshop on hearing

BLOOMSBURG — Mrs. Judith A. Dellaria of the staff of Colonial Northampton Intermediate Unit 20, Nazareth, has received a special traineeship to participate in a summer workshop at Bloomsburg State College, according to an announcement made by the college and the State Department of Education.

The workshop, which will be conducted June 23 through August 1, is jointly sponsored by the Department of Communication Disorders at the college and the Division of Special Education of the State Department of Education.

Mrs. Dellaria was selected for the traineeship as a result of competition throughout Eastern Pennsylvania. The purpose of the workshop is to introduce new equipment and procedures to be used by professionals who work with hearing impaired and deaf children. Many such children hear only sounds in the low pitch range. The equipment is designed to make low pitch sounds louder so the children can make best use of their remaining hearing.

TAD plans to honor blood donor, 25,000

TOBYHANNA — The 687th blood donor will be accorded a special reception at Tobyhanna Army Depot during its 41st semi-annual Red Cross blood drive July 21 through 24. He or she is destined to become depot donor 25,000.

Since blood drives began at the depot in 1954, 24,313 pints have been collected.

Chances of reaching the magic number are good. During the three-day drive last January, 726 pints were given. This year the drive is being expanded to four days, to accommodate more donors.

Once again, bloodletting will occur in the Susquehanna Room near the Post Restaurant. Collections will begin at 9 a.m. Monday, July 21, and at 8:15 a.m. on the following days.

Blood stocks will be stored in a Red Cross bloodmobile dispatched from the Regional Blood Center at Wilkes-Barre.

"The depot with a heart" has won national notice for its blood program, claiming over 1,000 members of the One Gallon Club, reputed to be a record for federal agencies.

Depot drives are slated on the heels of holidays because the Red Cross says the urgency to replenish dwindling stocks is greatest then.

TAD promotion

TOBYHANNA — Elizabeth Millard, Scranton, is promoted to chief of the Commodity Management Branch, Depot Property Division, at Tobyhanna Army Depot. She accepted her promotional certificate from Colonel William E. Dasch, commander. The new position carries a GS-9 grade.

Waring workshop receives scholarship

EAST STROUDSBURG — The Fred Waring Music Workshop in association with East Stroudsburg State College has received a $1,000.00 scholarship from the Theodore Presser Foundation of Bryn Mawr.

Peter T. Kiefer, workshop managing director, said that the Presser Foundation Scholarship will be used to bring five young people to this summer's Waring Workshop to be held at E.S.S.C. during July and August.

The Presser Foundation was established by the late Theodore Presser who founded the Presser Music Publishing firm. The foundation was established to further the creativity of both young and old in the field of music, and is a living tribute to the memory of Theodore Presser.

The Waring Workshop is held annually at East Stroudsburg State College for both teachers and young musicians. Fred Waring and a staff of working professionals teach their methods of presenting choral music of all kinds.

According to Kiefer, the Waring Workshop will be awarding over twenty full or partial scholarships to youth who have sent audition tapes in from all over the United States and Canada.

A full range of course study is offered to the nearly 600 who attend each year. Study is given in Staging and Lighting, Choral Arranging and Conducting Sound and Recording techniques, Church Music, popular repertory and program building to only mention a few.

Senior club plans trip

BRODHEADSVILLE — The Fairview Senior Citizen's Club of the West End will be sponsoring a special trip to Quiet Valley Farm next Saturday, July 26. Reservations must be made as soon as possible by calling Carl Waller at 717-629-0615.

Members who plan to ride the bus to the farm should report to the parking lot in front of the A&P in Brodheadsville at 10 a.m. The fee for the bus trip is $2 per person.

Boy Scouts set roundup chief

ALLENTOWN — Richard Stevens, Vice President of District Operations for Minsi Trails Council, Boy Scouts of America, announced that John Leh II, a partner with H. Leh & Company in Allentown will serve as 1975 Roundup Chairman. Leh is active in many community affairs and business associations, is a member of the Executive Board of the Minsi Trails Council, and has a great deal of volunteer experience.

The intent of the Roundup program is to provide a means of inviting each boy of Cub, Scout and Explorer age to join the Scouting program between August 1st and December 31, 1975. Leh and his committee will recommend various methods to the Cub Packs and Scout Troops whereby they may tell their story to prospective new members as well as appropriately recognize individual and unit pacesetters in this effort.

Brezhnev wants to close career on a positive note

By DONALD R. LARRABEE
Hawkey News Service
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Some of the U.S. senators who have just returned from Moscow talks with Soviet leaders are convinced that General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev is on the way out, quite probably within the year.

They disagree about his appearance. Some said he looks strong and healthy despite rumors that he has been ill. Others thought he had lost color since the Communist Party Chief was in Washington for a summit meeting with former President Richard Nixon two years ago.

But what impressed a number of the senators was Brezhnev's apparent desire to close off his career without a return to the bleak years of the Cold War. He became highly emotional at times when he spoke of the necessity to renounce war and when he harked back to the agonies of the Russian people in World War Two.

"He talked in nostalgic terms, always for peace," said Sen. Ernest Hollings D-S.C. "He spoke in terms that indicate to me that he's reaching the end of the line. He jumped around the room with a certain spirit but he didn't have the color in his face that he had before."

Consumerism deserves support

A long overdue blow for the consumer was struck with the approval by the Pennsylvania House of a consumer legislation package that is broad in approach and which gives needed powers to the state's Bureau of Consumer Protection.

There are some weaknesses, but most are minor. One, however, is not. It places the burden of court costs on the consumer when he sues to have a defective item repaired or replaced. Considering that most such items are neither costly nor excessively expensive to repair, it would hardly pay for the consumer to run up a high legal bill to seek judicial remedy.

The business community lobbied strenuously for that proviso, under the defense that the small businessman would be hurt. Nonsense. Only the dishonest purveyor of shoddy merchandise would be hurt, and he deserves it.

There is an out, though. The consumer may work through the Bureau of Consumer Protection, which can order repairs or replacements of defective goods. The problem with that recourse is that it is limited to items that carry warranties or guarantees. And, what with the additional duties imposed on the bureau, the time element could become almost as great a deterrent to seeking redress as the cost of legal action.

The consumer package isn't final yet. It still must withstand the onslaught of predictable Senate amendments. As easy as it is for lobbyists and special interests to get their way in the House, it is far easier in the Senate, where formidable opposition to the reform package is expected.

We'll be watching what happens in the Senate, and we suggest everyone do the same. It is time the upper house was given a lesson in responsive and responsible government. Consumers outnumber special interests by a massive margin. They cannot compete in money, but they can in votes.

If you are interested in fair and sweeping consumer legislation reform, let your senator know. And let him know that his chances of re-election hinge on his acting in the public's interest, not in the interest of a powerful minority.

Good appointment

For years Monroe County has been unusual in having a woman county commissioner, and unique in having that woman as chairman of the board.

Now the county has added another dimension to the struggle for sexual equality with the appointment of Mrs. Linda Miller as an assistant district attorney.

It is a welcome breakthrough and one that will bear dividends in the future. Through the years our society has deprived itself of the brains, energy and contributions of half the population by keeping such positions the exclusive property of men.

That situation was undoubtedly more comfortable for males, the competition was reduced significantly, but we can no longer afford such puerile and arbitrary discrimination. Ours is one of the few advanced nations that has such a small minority of women in positions that make a significant public contribution to society.

Mrs. Miller's appointment is a significant and important one from that point of view particularly, and we wish her well in her post. May the district attorney's example be emulated by others in the county and elsewhere.

Sen. Gary Hart D-Colo. caught a tone of finality in Brezhnev's rambling remarks over a period of two hours. Paraphrasing the Soviet official, Hart said the Russian declared:

"All of us have to make a contribution in our lifetimes. Eventually each of us, because of age, must step down. I want to leave a legacy of better understanding and a better environment in the world."

An interesting footnote to that speech, Hart said, was later supplied by a top U.S. embassy official who was the only American present who understood Russian.

Actually, Brezhnev had said . . . "each of us because of age or illness must step down," Hart said the senators were later informed. The reference to "illness" was not used by the Soviet interpreter.

Another who came away with a feeling that the Russian leader wants very deeply to normalize relations with the United States is Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D.-Conn., who said Brezhnev seemed sincerely interested in obtaining agreements involving trade, arms limitations and the Middle East.

But while Brezhnev and some other Soviet officials seemed conciliatory and cooperative, according to the visiting senators, the formal talks were invariably under the pressure of hardline Communist theoreticians. The U.S. lawmakers are not optimistic about long-range understandings between East and West.

Hollings, for example, found the Soviet leaders strident in their tone and as determined as ever to move their system forward all around the world. While talking detente, Hollings said there was evidence that the Russians are outspending us on military weapons.

The South Carolina senator said he believes Brezhnev is "under the gun" to reach certain goals by the time the Party Congress meets next February. These include a formalizing of boundaries with Eastern European satellites, conclusion of strategic arms talks, an extension of detente and expansion of trade with the West.

The talks with the Soviet counterparts may have paved the way for a breakthrough on a formula to solve the problems created by last year's Jackson amendment which bars the granting of trade advantages to the Soviet Union unless it relaxes emigration restraints on Soviet Jews.

Ribicoff, for one, said he would seek modification of the amendment which the Russians regard as an attempt to interfere with their internal affairs.

Hollings said the Americans told the Russians forcefully that it is a "domestic issue" in this country, as well. Compromise language and a softening of the American position was generally predicted by the returning senators.

The talks with the Soviet counterparts bogged down completely, however, when it came to comparing defense budgets and arms spending. There was mutual distrust of figures and plans, with the Soviets continuing to accuse the U.S. of violating treaties and causing trouble in the Middle East and elsewhere in the world.

By all accounts, the unusual visit by 15 U.S. senators appeared to be a practical success, if for no other reason than the fact that it gave the Russians a better understanding of the role of Congress in setting U.S. foreign policy these days.

The Soviets were pointedly advised that the President and Dr. Henry Kissinger cannot come to any agreements unless Congress agrees. They were exposed to diverse philosophies and approaches from conservatives and liberals in both Parties and they seemed to be taking careful note of their visitors as living proof of new attitudes and a strengthening of Congress in the post-Nixon era.

In short, the U.S. senators came away feeling there are doors that can be opened, which is not to say they opened any of them.

Apollo-Soyuz sidelights

(Second of two columns)

WASHINGTON — Sidelights on the upcoming joint manned space flight of the U.S. Apollo spacecraft and the Soviet Soyuz, which begins orbiting the earth July 15:

1 — Why are three American astronauts and only two Soviet cosmonauts participating? It is a matter of design and usage. The Apollo is a larger vehicle, more maneuverable, apparently more sophisticated. It weighs 38,000 pounds against 15,000 for the Soyuz. The part of the Soyuz used for liftoff is a two-seater; the Apollo's is a three-seater.

2 — What is basically new in the flight hardware? Primarily the docking unit and each spacecraft's adaption to it. Needed was a completely new docking unit for both the Apollo and the Soyuz which would permit the two different types of spacecraft to join up together.

U.S. astronaut Deke Slayton calls the docking module the "world's fastest, highest-flying sewer pipe." It serves as an air lock between the two spacecraft since they have different internal atmospheres. Hatches at both ends permit the transfer of crews.

Docking unit

The United States manufactured the docking unit. It was jointly designed.

3 — What is the "atmosphere" problem? The Soyuz operates on an internal atmosphere of nitrogen and oxygen as at sea level: 14.7 pounds per square inch. The Apollo uses pure oxygen at 5 pounds per square inch. For cosmonauts to transfer to the Apollo would require they prebreathe pure oxygen to purge nitrogen from their bloodstreams. Otherwise they would suffer the bends as divers do coming up too quickly from great depths.

To eliminate time-consuming prebreathing, the Soviets lowered the internal pressure to 10 pounds per square inch. Pressure equalization valves permit crew transfers without disturbing the atmosphere of either spacecraft.

The new docking module will be used on America's future space shuttle flights and on all Soviet manned spacecraft.

4 — How secretive were both countries in staging this joint venture? There was little technology exchange. That was not its objective. The United States was more open than the Soviets, who long resisted allowing our astronauts to visit the Soyuz' liftoff pad at Baykonur, though the Russians had earlier been allowed to see the Apollo's blastoff base in Florida and Mission Control Center in Houston.

5 — What are the problems in flying such a joint mission? More language problems than technology. Each crew studied the other's language and will be able to converse. The tracking networks of each had to be meshed.

6 — What will the crews say to each other when they part? The Russians will probably say "Been nice seeing you" and the Americans will reply "Da svidanya."

Third World bosses delight in humiliating white man

In the global slum sometimes referred to as the Third World, a preferred form of recreation for the local tyrant this year is humiliating the white man. Everyone is getting into the act, from Uganda's Alley Oop dictator Idi Amin and Zaire's heart-of-darkness ruler Mobutu Sese Seko to the Communist bosses of Mozambique, North Korea, Laos, and Cambodia.

In Phnom Penh following the Communist takeover, whites — conspicuously including Soviet personnel — were herded into a central compound and held there for several weeks. Food and water supplies were deliberately kept at inadequate levels. Then the whites were ejected from the country via a painful and at times hazardous five-day truck ride to the border. Travel by air was not permitted. The fact the Soviet Communists were subjected to this treatment demonstrates clearly enough its racial basis.

The seizure of the Mayaguez, of course, fits into this pattern, though there the affront did not quite work out as planned.

In Laos the Communist bosses looked on benignly while students and-or thugs roughed up U.S. personnel and seized U.S. installations.

At the DMZ in Korea, a dozen North Korean troops beat and kicked U.S. Army

Jeffrey Hart

Major William Henderson into unconsciousness. A U.S. woman sergeant was also punched around.

Several motives

In Uganda, Idi Amin's behavior in the Denis Hills affair probably has more than one motive, but calculated humiliation of the British was high on the list.

Hills, a lecturer and British subject, was arrested and sentenced to death for calling Amin a "village tyrant" in an unpublished manuscript. During negotiations with the British emissary, who happened to be Amin's former commanding officer, Amin put out the word that the emissary had begged for Hills' life on his knees, apparently a lie. Amin also threatened to arrest as spies the 700 British who for some reason still remain in Uganda. He demanded that British Foreign Secretary James Callaghan come in person to plead for Hills' life.

It was all good fun, almost as good as cooking a missionary in a pot. Amin announced a reprieve, and Callaghan packed his bags to go to Kampala, and Hills was released.

Amin, an admirer of Adolf Hitler, possesses a style now recognizable as distinctive. Thus, after inviting himself to Princess Anne's wedding, he next inquired whether, in view of England's financial plight, there would be enough food for him there. Thus, he fired and exiled his Foreign Minister and accused her of having sexual intercourse in a toilet at Orly airport.

Radio Moscow's output

In the Hills' affair, besides administering a noisy humiliation to the British, Amin was undoubtedly playing East African jungle politics. He passionately desires to host this year's conference of the Organization of Africa Unity, because of the prestige involved and because this year's host becomes next year's OAU chairman. The British have been opposing this design behind the scenes, and the Hills' caper was Amin's rejoinder.

Interestingly enough, both Libya and the Soviet Union loudly backed Amin during Hills' imprisonment. Radio Moscow denouncing "the outrageous campaign against the Ugandan people" being carried on by the British press. It is worth noting that some 1,300 Ugandan officials have received training and indoctrination in the Soviet Union, and that official Soviet doctrine now recognizes military dictatorship as a transitional phase leading to Communist takeovers in the Third World.

The pattern of Third World affronts to the West, however, crops up elsewhere. In Zaire, the local dictator Mobutu noisily expelled the U.S. Ambassador, Deane R. Hinton, recently on the grounds that he was leading a CIA assassination plot.

Newly "liberated" Mozambique, which now has a Marxist regime, pointedly refused to invite the United States, West Germany, France, or Great Britain to its Independence Day celebration.

The representatives of these people will soon be on display in New York, when the U.N. General Assembly reconvenes as the longest running off-Broadway show on record, and no doubt, as usual, the large auditorium will ring with their demands for U.S. aid, now customarily called "redistribution" of wealth.

Lot more to investing in oil, gas than tax benefits

If you judge by the tens of millions of words that have been written about oil and gas investments, you well might believe that the biggest lure is the tax shelter they offer the top-money taxpayers. And of course, they do offer extraordinarily valuable tax benefits, the most significant of which — the "intangible drilling cost deduction" — wasn't even touched by the 1975 tax law. Even the much ballyhooed crackdown on the oil depletion allowance in this law actually turns out to be not much more than a slap on the wrist.

But there's a lot more to investing in oil and gas than just tax benefits. And in fact, says Eli Warach, a major specialist in this field, the aim of an investment in oil should be the same as the goal of any other investment — to make money. The tax benefits should be regarded as the added benefit that makes the investment even more attractive.

Is now a good time to get into oil and gas investments? "There probably has never been a better time," Warach stresses. Prices are higher than ever and seem to be heading higher. Payouts from production that were considered just "fair" are now climbing into the "good" or "excellent" category. A producing well, in short, will throw off more income for investors than ever before.

How to deal in

Let's say you can afford the risks, are intrigued, but also are ignorant of the intricacies. How can you, a passive investor, get a square shot at getting in on a good oil deal?

Sylvia Porter

(1) Follow the lead of most successful oil "independents" and do not go into an oil venture entirely on your own.

Most independent oil pros usually get two, three, or even four other oil pros to take a piece of the venture. The result is there are three or four separate professional opinions, three or four separate geological reports, etc. All in all, a set-up like this often pays off because you — the investor — are betting with the professionals, not against them.

(2) Spread your risks by putting your investment dollars in a drilling program that combines development and exploratory drilling.

To explain, there's a lot of risk when you and your professional partners are drilling exploratory wells — the so-called "wildcats," which hit an average of about one out of 10. Even with a big payoff on successful wells, you're bucking high odds — which is, obviously, the prime reason for the tax incentives to people investing in drilling ventures.

But in development drilling, the driller works in a "proven" area — a vicinity where oil has already been found. Here you could wind up with seven or eight producers out of every 10 wells, although there rarely are big gushers among them.

If you combine the two drilling programs, however, you end up with a balanced investment. Development drilling keeps you in the game while wildcat drilling gives you a chance at the big money.

Combination valuable

The combination gives the sponsor — and you, the investor — some return on your investment while it sets up the opportunity to find a large oil field with big results.

(3) Go with a pro — meaning look for the outfit with oil drilling know-how and people who are successful in the oil business.

More specifically, make sure your driller is a businessman with real business knowledge. Search for the outfit which has a track record showing not only a high number of "hits" but also profitable production for the investors from those hits.

(4) Put money in the ground — an old oil investor's axiom referring to how the money you put up is spent. As a rule of thumb, 85 per cent of your dollars should go into the hunt for oil and only a minimum should come off the top.

(5) Watch out for the deal that's "front" loaded in favor of the general partner or promoter. An oil deal often is set up as a limited partnership — the driller is the general partner and you, the investors, are the limited partners. The general partner should make his money from the discovery and development of oil and gas, not from money you put up.

Stories Behind Words

Baker's Dozen

Bread can be made so that two loaves are the same size, yet one weighs more than the other. This has been recognized for centuries. The lighter loaf contains more air pockets, hence less bread.

Several centuries ago a law was passed in England that regulated the sale of bread by weight. Any baker who violated the law was liable to a severe penalty.

Bakers, in order to make sure that they did not violate the regulation, started giving an extra loaf with each dozen they sold. From this practice arose the expression "baker's dozen," meaning thirteen.

Senate leader says Shapp violates oath

HARRISBURG (UPI) — Senate Majority Leader Thomas Nolan, D-Allegheny, said Friday Gov. Milton J. Shapp will be violating his oath of office if he allows James McHale to stay on as secretary of the Agriculture Department.

In a letter to Attorney General Robert Kane, Nolan accused the Shapp administration of seeking to violate the Constitution by allowing McHale and two other defeated nominees to remain in office.

The Senate voted Tuesday to reject the nominations of McHale, Liquor Control Board Chairman Henry Kaplan and Civil Service Commission Chairman Grace Hatch, although there is a possibility the nominations will be reconsidered Monday.

The Senate also defeated Shapp's nomination of Philip Kalodner to the Public Utility Commission.

Kane immediately ruled that McHale, Kaplan and Mrs. Hatch could stay in office because they were appointed on an interim basis before a constitutional amendment changing the confirmation process took effect.

That amendment prohibits interim appointments, but Kane said that since the three were appointed before the amendment was adopted May 20, they are not affected by it.

Kalodner was not affected by that ruling because he was not an interim appointee.

Nolan, however, told Kane that ruling "is totally contrary to the will of the voters, and, in the view of this office, inaccurate." He also said the ruling was "nothing more than an 'end run' of the Constitution."

Nolan said that under the constitutional amendment, the governor must submit to the Senate a nomination to fill a vacancy within 90 days.

"As a result of Senate action taken this week, a failure to submit a new name to the Senate to fill the vacancy of a post such as the Secretary of Agriculture and others within 90 days would be a violation of the governor's oath to support the Constitution of Pennsylvania," Nolan said.

Nolan said that statement was not a threat that he would call on the House to impeach Shapp if McHale is defeated a second time and Shapp does not send the Senate another nomination.

"All I'm doing is pointing out the governor's responsibility," Nolan said. "I'm just reminding him of his duties ahead of time."

Nolan also protested statements that Kalodner was defeated because Shapp did not nominate former Sen. Thomas Lamb, D-Allegheny, to another vacant PUC post.

"This was nothing more than a 'hold up' in an attempt to force approval of Kalodner, who is regarded as a less than acceptable new chairman," Nolan said. "This whole incident encouraged by the governor's aides flies in the face of the law."

He said that under a 1938 Pennsylvania Supreme Court ruling, PUC commissioners are "instruments of the legislature" and that ruling, the Senate, not Shapp, has the power to make PUC appointments.

Too many amendments?

House drops malpractice debate

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — For the second day in a row, the Pennsylvania House Friday was forced to abandon its plans to debate a medical malpractice insurance bill because members balked at debating 150 amendments.

"I can't recall any bill that accumulated as many amendments," said Majority Leader K. Leroy Irvis, D-Allegheny, after he announced the floor fight on the bill would be postponed until Monday.

The bill is designed to put an end to the soaring cost of malpractice insurance, which has led many of Pennsylvania's 18,000 doctors to threaten a strike unless the legislature acts quickly.

However, leaders on both sides say the malpractice debate is quickly becoming the hottest issue the legislature has faced since the fight over no-fault auto insurance.

That is because the Pennsylvania Medical Society is pushing a bill that would limit or eliminate the right to sue, a move that has the state's trial lawyers up in arms.

"It's just like no-fault," said one exasperated House leader after the chamber adjourned. "Every clause in that bill can

Group asks local school control

HARRISBURG (UPI) — The Pennsylvania Chamber of Commerce has called on the General Assembly to block a proposed shift of controls from local to state officials under the proposed new school code.

The chamber board of directors said it would endorse the revised code if it was amended to prevent the shift of present local school board authority to the state Department of Education.

In a carefully worded position statement to reach business and industrial leaders next week, the board commended code drafters' intentions, hard work and solicitation of public input.

"But in the attempt to streamline the present school law, the chamber believes some harmful and unwanted changes have been made," the board said.

"The chamber's education committee and board believe some of the revisions would shift the traditional responsibility of governing public schools from the local boards to the State Board of Education, the state Department of Education and its secretary."

Education Secretary John Pittenger told legislators the new code proposed no major changes in State Board of Education or departmental authority and that it broadened the authority of local districts.

The chamber said the proposed code makes "broad, catch-all grants of power to the state Board of Education and establishes the secretary of education as the enforcer of education laws of the commonwealth and the rules and regulations of the state Board of Education."

"The proposed code would increase the secretary's present role by granting him the broad power to withhold funds from school boards and enforce the increased powers the code would grant to the state board."

The chamber said that though the new code would allow school boards reasonable discretion to operate their districts, actual authority for such discretion would rest with the State Board of Education and

Shapp aide to conduct campaign

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — Gov. Milton Shapp said Friday that Norval D. Reece, one of his top aides, has been granted a leave-of-absence to become Shapp's presidential campaign manager.

The governor said Reece, his special assistant for intergovernmental affairs, will leave his state job July 23.

Three weeks ago a Shapp for President Committee registered with the Federal Elections Commission with Henry A. Satterwaite, chairman of the board of Allegheny Airlines, as co-chairman and G. Thomas Miller, a Harrisburg attorney, as treasurer.

Shapp said Dr. Zalmon H. Garfield, of San Francisco, one of Shapp's long-time business associates, will serve as a special consultant to the Shapp for President Committee.

Garfield served as an advisor and consultant to Shapp in previous campaigns.

"During the next few months, I will be talking to people throughout the country and discussing the issues facing the American people," Shapp said.

As Shapp's special assistant for intergovernmental relations, Reece served as a representative to the National Governor's Conference, on various interstate compacts and other national organizations.

Kallinger to face N.J. charges

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — Philadelphia shoemaker Joseph Kallinger will be extradited to New Jersey to face murder charges after his trial on burglary and robbery charges is completed here in September.

Dauphin County Court Judge William W. Caldwell Friday granted an extradition order for Kallinger, 38, after a witness placed Kallinger at the scene of the slaying of Maria Pasching, 21, in Leonia, N.J. last Jan. 8.

President maintains post-Mayaguez popularity gains

By GEORGE GALLUP

PRINCETON, N.J. — President Gerald Ford maintains his post-Mayaguez gains in popularity. In the latest nationwide survey, 52 per cent approve of the way Ford is handling his job as President, compared to 33 per cent who disapprove and 15 per cent who do not express an opinion.

In the previous survey, completed in early June, 51 per cent approved, 33 per cent disapproved, while 16 per cent did not express an opinion. That survey reflected favorable reaction to the Mayaguez incident and an upturn in public optimism regarding the economy.

Ford thus begins what he described in a recent Cleveland speech as "not a New Deal but a fresh start," with approval outweighing disapproval among most major groups in the population, including traditionally Democratic groups such as Catholics, manual workers, young adults and labor union members.

There are, however, certain "soft spots" in Ford's popularity profile. Disapproval of his performance among blacks, for example, outweighs approval by better than a 2-to-1 margin.

In addition, analysis of the intensity of approval reveals that the 52 per cent approval score is far from an enthusiastic endorsement. In fact, only about one person in five (19 per cent) indicates that he "strongly approves" of the way the President is handling his job. As would be expected, ed, enthusiasm is most marked among Republicans, with 35 per cent strongly approving of Ford's performance. By way of contrast, only 12 per cent of Democrats and 17 per cent of independents express strong approval.

Gallup poll

Following is the question asked to measure presidential popularity:

"Do you approve or disapprove of the way (name of incumbent) is handling his job as President?"

Here is the full trend for Ford since taking office:

To determine intensity of approval or disapproval, all persons in the survey were asked to indicate how strongly they approve or disapprove of Ford's handling of his job as chief executive. The question and national results:

"How strongly would you say you approve (disapprove) — very strongly or not so strongly?"

Potential trouble spot?

Arms race rages in East Africa

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — A major arms race involving Russia, China and the United States is under way in the Horn of Africa, making this area the continent's next potential trouble spot.

So distrustful are the East African countries of each other that a potentially devastating conflict could erupt in almost any direction.

Somalia has traditional claims against huge chunks of Ethiopia and Kenya. Uganda has periodically threatened Kenya and Tanzania.

The Soviet Union has been pouring weapons into both Somalia and Uganda. China has equipped Tanzania with weapons and warplanes.

Washington is the traditional supplier of Ethiopia and recently has been approached by a worried Kenya for equipment, according to Western diplomats.

But it is the Soviet involvement which is causing most concern from Nairobi to Washington.

Soviet-supplied Uganda and Somalia now have the largest armed forces in East Africa. They have the most belligerent and unstable regimes in the area and are the likeliest countries to spark a major confrontation with one of their neighbors.

The Russians' buildup began three years ago.

Western diplomats said the aid to Uganda was intended to counter Chinese influence in neighboring Tanzania and to, as one said, "stir up a little trouble on the way."

The Soviets have given Ugandan President Idi Amin at least 56 light tanks, an unknown number of personnel carriers, a squadron of Mig17s — already largely been written off because of pilot error — and more recently ground-to-ground and ground-to-air missiles.

Russian pilots are also flying a squadron of Mig21 fighters — the most lethal aircraft currently flying East African skies. Amin admitted recently that some of the hundreds of Russian technicians in his country "are helping us assemble fighter planes and train pilots."

He added, "The Russians are friendly to us, but are not controlling us."

The Soviet buildup in Somalia has been even more awesome. Western military sources estimate there are 3,600 Russians in Somalia and Moscow has delivered Mig21 fighters, SAM2 surface-to-air missiles, 150 old T35 tanks, 100 modern T54s, at least 300 armored personnel carriers, 300 coastal batteries, more than 50 other Mig fighters, a squadron of Ilyushin-28 bombers, and six patrol boats.

The 17,000-strong Somali army now has the largest tank force in black Africa.

The United States says, and Somalia denies, that in return for the arms Moscow has been allowed to construct a missile base at the entrance to the Red Sea. U.S. intelligence reports say it is now 95 per cent complete.

Caught in the middle of this buildup by two potentially hostile neighbors, Kenya has started to express concern. Former Foreign Minister Njoroge Mungai, who still is a close friend of President Jomo Kenyatta, recently told parliament, "Seeing our neighbors bent on so much buying, we must ask ourselves this: Who do they want to fight? Let us also arm ourselves by buying modern equipment. Let us supply modern weapons to our police, army, air force and navy."

With only around 10,000 troops and a tiny air force of fewer than a dozen combat planes and no tanks, Kenya is the weakest of the East African nations militarily.

Britain is Nairobi's traditional weapons supplier, but according to diplomatic reports Nairobi has now approached the United States with a shopping list. The matter is still under consideration, according to reports from Washington.

Tanzania's 12,000-man regular army is equipped almost exclusively by the Chinese. Dar es Salaam has a squadron of Mig17s and a squadron of Mig21 fighters, but no tanks.

Ethiopia's 35,000-strong army is dependent on Washington for all weapons supply, but currently is tied down trying to contain a major conflict in the northern province of Eritrea and other minor insurrections.

In various government offices in the Somali capital of Mogadishu there are maps of "Greater Somalia" showing disputed areas in Kenya and Ethiopia under the Somali star.

And though area leaders' publicly profess peace toward their neighbors, a high-ranking Somali official recently told this correspondent, "Somalia still has enemies. Kenya is the No. 1 enemy. Ethiopia is our No. 2 enemy."

KEY ROLES — What Would You Like To Be When You Grow Up, Little Girl? How about a television producer, a sportscaster, a cameraman (cameraperson?) or a communications specialist? That's what these four women are doing for ABC Sports. The scene is the recent Colgate-Dinah Shore Winners Circle Golf Championship, where the talented quartet played key roles in live television coverage. They are associate producer Eleanor Riger, in front of her remote broadcast control trailer; Diane Biederbeck (center left) the first female camera operator ever to cover a golf telecast; pro golfer Cathy Duggan, who serves as an expert commentator when she's not playing, and Assistant Traffic Manager Charlotte McKervery, who handles the sophisticated communications systems.

SPCA plans to prosecute

Scenic Poconos hide many abandoned 'best friends'

IS THE
VACATION ROMANCE

STROUDSBURG — Man's best friend is often man's deserted friend in the Poconos.

Stray animals, which may become cases of animal abandonment, are one of the largest problems of the Monroe County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (SPCA), especially in the warm months from spring to fall when the shelter handles some 200 pets a week.

Summer is a time when pet owners let their animals romp more on their own. It is a time when pets want to go out — it is breeding season.

Perhaps worst of all, though, are summertime visitors to the Poconos who may buy a pet for their children for the summer — only to leave it behind when the vacation season's over in the fall.

The SPCA is starting a campaign this summer — to extend to next year's tourist season—to stop abandonment of summer pets in the Poconos.

Monroe SPCA Agent Ed Cantrill estimates there are at least 100 such animals abandoned a year. The danger of the loose animals lies in the formation of dog packs.

"The packs form especially in wooded areas. All it takes is one leader and the nicest house pet can turn into a pack dog," said Cantrill.

Packs may attack livestock (or people) simply for sport or they may truly be hungry. A dog pack is held responsible for sheep killings in Smithfield Township over a year ago.

Cantrill hopes that with the help of local and out-of-state police he can prosecute any summer visitors who abandon their dogs (or cats) when leaving the Poconos.

Abandonment

Abandonment is against the cruelty to animals law. Abandonment does not have to mean leaving an animal off from a car or in a locked garage. It means simply leaving an animal anywhere — in a shelter after being notified that he's there or at the veterinarian's after he's been brought for treatment.

Abandonment is punishable by a fine of up to $100.

Cantrill plans to keep an eye out, with area police, for visitors to the Poconos who leave their pets behind. If he doesn't find suspected deserters this year, he plans to have charges brought when they come back next year. There is a two year statute of limitations on abandonment cases.

Cantrill estimates he has prosecuted approximately 20 abandonment cases in the past two years amid an estimated total of 50 cruelty cases.

Summer pet buyers are by no means all deserters. And, according to Cantrill, summer is an excellent time to bring a puppy into the home.

A puppy can be housebroken more easily than — the owner doesn't have to stand in the snow waiting for the dog to get the right idea. Also, children are home and can assume some responsibility for the animal.

But summertime also brings a special need for animal care.

Summer dog care

Dogs should not be tied in the sun with no access to shade. They should also be provided with enough water. If your dog keeps knocking over his water dish, Cantrill suggests hanging the water container from a tree or post.

Dogs should also not be left in a car with closed or even almost closed windows. The temperature will quickly jump to almost 100 degrees.

"It's easier to leave the dog at home than leave it in the car," chastised Cantrill.

A dog who is left out in the elements all day in winter or summer must have a dog house by law — defined as three walls and a roof. — for protection.

A dog older than six months old must have a license, for both his and owner's protection. A license makes for quick identification and may save the dog's life. The SPCA, by law, must hold a licensed dog seven days.

The dog must be wearing the tag. It does him no good in the dining room sidebar.

"So much 'cruelty' is just simple ignorance of animal needs," said Cantrill.

DA rescues pup in heat of moment

STROUDSBURG — Monroe County's district attorney took the law into his own hands Thursday to save a life — a dog's life.

DA James Marsh rescued a puppy locked in a car parked not far from his Seventh Street, Stroudsburg, office. The dog, chained to the seats, was apparently suffering from heat prostration.

Marsh viewed "a lot of commotion" from his office window Thursday and went out to investigate. Workers from nearby offices were worrying over a small puppy struggling to crawl between the seats of a black station wagon.

The dog, his tongue hanging out, finally staggered into open car space.

The DA came to the rescue with a coat hanger and unlocked one of the doors through a slightly-opened window.

Workers from the Monroe County Board of Assistance brought the pup some water and called the SPCA. The dog was picked up and the owners notified by note of the animal's whereabouts.

Marsh later saw the worried owners on the sidewalk and directed them to the SPCA — not without a few words of caution on leaving pets in locked cars to suffer in the heat.

Rape victims' plight gets attention

SAN FRANCISCO — Kate Jackson, a 20-year-old office manager for an accounting firm, lives alone here. One morning recently, a man crawled through a window in her apartment, warned that he had a knife and raped her.

Rape is an astonishingly commonplace crime, most experts agree. Kate Jackson (that's not her real name) was one of more than 50,000 reported cases last year. But if all victims reported the crime, criminologists say, she would likely be one of perhaps 500,000 cases.

Miss Jackson's reaction to the rape was commonplace, too. She was hesitant to call the police, having found them unsympathetic when they investigated a robbery of a store she once owned. But her anger eventually overcame her reluctance.

Now she is glad that she reported the rape. Three officers arrived quickly, urged her to relax and took the time to drink coffee and make small talk with her. Then they questioned her gently about the attack and drove her to a hospital so that proper evidence could be obtained. "They were being human beings for a change," she recalls.

That change is obvious across the nation. Early in the 1970, feminist groups complained of a lack of sensitive support given rape victims by medical and law-enforcement agencies. They pointed to many instances where rape victims, already frightened and humiliated, faced indifference or ridicule from officials investigating their cases. The women's groups set up telephone hot lines and crisis centers to provide raped women with emotional support and counseling.

Their message hasn't been lost on public officials. In the past year or so, thousands of rape victims have encountered a more sensitive response than they might have found earlier on the part of police officers, hospital attendants, prosecuting attorneys and perhaps more important, state legislators.

A major impetus for action has been what appears to be a dramatic nationwide increase in rape. The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) estimates that in 1973, the latest year for which figures are available 51,000 forcible rapes were reported, compared with 21,250 in 1964. Preliminary 1974 reports indicate a nine per cent increase last year.

Part of the increase is probably a result of women's growing willingness to report rapes. But experts believe it also reflects an actual rise in the incidence of rape. An FBI spokesman says rape is "probably the most under-reported crime in the country." Many criminologists figure that there are upwards of 10 rapes for every one that appears on police blotters.

The aftershock of rage, fear and shame that seizes the victims is the major reason so few rapes are reported. The trauma doesn't disappear quickly, and it can sometimes build as time goes by, as Miss Jackson discovered.

The morning after her attack, she went to work. That night, she refused friends' invitations to stay with them and remained in her house alone. But Miss Jackson, an unusually strong person, admits, "You may think you're all right and then find that you're not."

Ten days after the attack, Miss Jackson says, she "broke down terribly."

Police departments, some with help from local women's groups and other concerned citizens, are rewriting rape-investigation guidelines and are holding special "sensitivity-training" sessions for everyone from the cop on the beat to the head of the sex-crimes or morals detail.

"There's no doubt about it, the stereotyping attitudes are changing, and we've come a long way," says Sgt. Romero Yumul, head of the Seattle Police Department's morals detail.

Miss Jackson's positive experience with the police hasn't allayed all her fears about working within the system. She worries about the ordeal of a trial, should her assailant be arrested.

Indeed, rape cases are notorious for their conviction difficulty. Many attorneys, shying away from all but the easiest stranger-attacks-victim-in-front-of-10-witnesses cases, have offered rape victims little encouragement.

In spite of progress in the courts, prosecutors say they can only move as far as the law allows them.

Now, in every part of the nation, legislatures are changing sexual statutes to make prosecution of rapists easier or to make public agencies more sensitive to the plight of victims.

In Michigan, for example, a year-long effort supported by over 3,000 women and men resulted in the passage of a comprehensive criminal sexual-conduct statute. The new law widens the definition of force in rape cases to include threat of force. It also forbids as irrelevant to a victim's past sexual experience.

Michigan's law, effective this year, "puts the burden of proof on the defense," says Jan Bender, a representative of the Michigan Women's Task Force, which led the fight for the law.

Many other state legislatures are acting to abolish references to a woman's prior sexual experience at a rape trial. California and New York recently enacted such laws.

Moose women honored

STROUDSBURG — Women of the Moose College of Regents were honored recently at the Moose Lodge.

Honored collegian Guy Nell Peet was invested with a red tassel for completing her 15th year.

Elizabeth Gower received a red stole to symbolize completion of four years in the college.

A special ceremony was held for the draping of the charter to honor deceased member Ida Krebs, a member of the Women of the Moose for 23 years.

Chairman Marie Strunk presided.

Counseling available

STROUDSBURG — In the Stroudsburg area, rape victims can receive moral support and counseling from members of the Pocono Chapter of the National Organization for Women (NOW), which has established a rape task force.

Area police have been notified of the task force's offer to help and should ask victims if they would like such a counselor present to help them through the investigation.

Police have also been instructed to offer the victim medical help and to help arrange for transportation.

Local needs considered

Hearing set on social services

SCRANTON — Residents of Northeastern Pennsylvania will have the opportunity to comment at a regional public hearing on the first state-wide proposed plan for social services to be held in the Recreation Hall of the Clarks Summit State Hospital on July 23 from 10:00 a.m. until 4:00 p.m.

According to Kathryn S. McKenna, Deputy Secretary of the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare's Northeastern Region, the purpose of the hearing is to give all interested persons the opportunity to comment on the proposed plan.

"In the past, the social service delivery system in each state had to be approved by the Federal government," stated Mrs. McKenna. "However, under the new Title 20 regulations of the Social Security Act, each state will now structure the programs to meet the specific needs of the residents. Under Title 20, the content of the Pennsylvania services plan will be subject to review by the citizens of the Commonwealth rather than to approval by the Federal government."

"Until now, programs have been required to offer identical services in all parts of the state without regard to variations in local needs."

"Under Title 20, however, different services can be offered in different geographic areas within the state. Such differences must be explained in the State's annual services plan."

"Based on local needs, program emphasis can vary from region to region within the state. For example, a greater proportion of resources can be allocated for services to children in some geographic areas and for services to older people in others."

Mrs. McKenna explained that to assure citizens the opportunity to review the state's services plan, the law requires an open planning process.

"Title 20 can make significant changes in our social services program in regard to what services will be available, who will be eligible to receive services and where as well as how these services will be provided," added the Deputy Secretary.

The social services to be provided include adoption services, chore services, family counseling, day care for children and adults, employment counseling, family planning, foster home care for children and adults, home delivered meals and group dining programs, homemaker services, housing improvements, legal services, life skills education, such as, budgeting and nutrition, protective care for children and adults, socialization and recreation, and transportation.

These services will be provided either directly by the Department of Public Welfare or by public and private agencies and will include such programs as Aging, Child Welfare, Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

County Board of Assistance, and Drug and Alcohol programs. The final plan is scheduled to become effective October 1, 1975, for a period of one year, coinciding with the Federal fiscal year. Annual plans will be prepared thereafter.

Anyone wishing to testify should telephone the Northeastern Regional Welfare Office at 717-961-4355 to be placed on the hearing schedule. At least one copy of the testimony should be submitted at the hearing for the official record. Copies of the state plan may be obtained at the County Board of Assistance Office.

The Northeastern Region of the Department of Public Welfare includes Berks, Bradford, Carbon, Lackawanna, Lehigh, Luzerne, Monroe, Northampton, Pike, Schuylkill, Sullivan, Susquehanna, Tioga, Wayne and Wyoming Counties.

Church sponsors live band

DINGMANS FERRY — Christian youth of all faiths will present an evening of entertainment beginning at 7:30 p.m. tonight at Holy Trinity Lutheran Church, near Child's Park.

A New Jersey string band called "Horiah" with Roger Bridgeman of Hemlock Farms will entertain throughout the evening. Games, food for sale and general discussion will be offered, according to John Halaas, youth coordinator for the event.

The Ecumenical youth group meets every Saturday night for Bible study and fellowship and has planned three festivals with live bands.

Other evenings on the schedule are July 26 and August 29. The theme for the summer is "Jesus Christ, our Resource" from Matthew 6:33.

Consumer suit names car dealers

ALLENTOWN — The Bureau of Consumer Protection Thursday charged that two Northampton County used car dealers have sold cars to which they did not hold valid titles.

As a result, some consumers have been unable to drive the cars they purchased from the two dealers because vehicles without titles cannot be registered with the Pennsylvania Bureau of Motor Vehicles.

The dealers involved are Motor World Brokers, Inc., of R.D. 1, Route 191, Nazareth, and Aaron E. Ostrander Jr., president, and The Car Barn, at 16th and Washington Streets, Easton, and owner Lamar L. Beller.

The charges were filed in Northampton County Common Pleas Court Thursday by Deputy Attorney General Judith A. Brown, attorney-in-charge of the Bureau's Lehigh Valley office.

The Bureau's investigation into the activities of the two dealers was conducted in conjunction with state police.

The Bureau's lawsuit alleges that both dealers have falsely told consumers that they hold clear titles to all cars they offer for sale and that they have registered the cars with the Bureau of Motor Vehicles.

Conservation service sets priorities

STROUDSBURG — The Soil Conservation Service in Monroe County has announced top priority will be given to developing conservation plans on farms during fiscal year 1976. Properly implemented plans will assist the farmer in producing crop yields from their land, a SCS spokesman said.

Erosion of top soil from the land reduces soil fertility. This loss in soil fertility spells a loss in the yield and profits. By following planned cropping rotations and applying conservation practices where necessary, soil loss can be kept to a tolerable minimum. The use of cover crops and liming and fertilizing according to soil test will help maintain the soil at a high level of fertility in addition to reducing soil erosion, according to the spokesman.

Farmers can sign up as a cooperator with the Monroe County Conservation District. The Soil Conservation Service will prepare a conservation plan to help farmers maximize yields and maximum profit from their land.

Contact the Soil Conservation Service at 2115 North Fifth Street, Stroudsburg, or phone 421-5220.

Q. On May 2 I sent $7.84 for two albums from Record Club of America. The records were out of stock, so I didn't immediately receive them. Then I received a letter which said the company would ship the available items and refund the purchase price of unavailable items. I didn't receive anything. I wrote several letters and received a reply which said I should return my value certificates for a refund of the selections currently not available. I have never received any value certificates. I just want my refund. I should be able to get my money back as easily as I sent it to them. Can you help me?

G.L.D., Pocono Lake

A. There seems to be a great deal of confusion in this case. We spoke to Record Club of America's customer service department and they were puzzled by the series of facts you gave us. The type of instructions you say you received aren't Record Club of America's usual policy. Expect a letter from the Club which will seek to clarify some facts and lead to a solution to your problem.

Q. On Nov. 13, 1974 I ordered some dishes from Townecraft Inc. in Dumont, N.J. The delivery date was March 1, 1975. I received only half my order. I wrote to the company and my salesman and finally found out the one item I ordered was no longer manufactured, but I could have a replacement instead. I received a set of saucers, which I already had. I don't want the saucers, just a refund of my money. What can I do?

B.C., Kunkletown

A. The foul-up may have been your fault. Townecraft's records show you ordered and signed for a specific set of dishes, which come with saucers, not fruit bowls. However, Townecraft is willing to take the saucers back and issue you a refund for $31.80. Return the 16 saucers via insured parcel post with a note saying you're entitled to a refund of $31.80 to Townecraft, Number 1 DeBoer Drive, Glen Rock, N.J. 07452, Attention Mr. DePietro.

Police, fire calls

Driver injured

STROUDSBURG — A Bangor man was injured and his car extensively damaged in a 3:50 a.m. accident Friday at Second and Main Street, Stroudsburg.

Police said David R. Hamm, 18, of 628 Market St., Bangor was headed west driving off the interborough bridge at a high rate of speed when he lost control of the car, cut across the traffic island and hit a utility pole.

Police are continuing their investigation of the incident. Hamm was treated and released from the General Hospital of Monroe County.

Bike warning

STROUDSBURG — Stroud Township Police Chief James Carey Friday issued a warning to people who ride bicycles at night.

"Section 801 of the Pennsylvania Motor Vehicle Code requires night bicycle riders to have one and a half inch rear reflectors and headlamps on the front," Carey said. Carey said there have been some "near misses," but no one has been injured yet.

Stove fire

MOUNT POCONO — A 6:20 p.m. stove fire at the home of Mrs. George Reiz, 65 Kinney Avenue, Mount Pocono was quickly extinguished by 25 men and four trucks from the Pocono Mountain fire department.

Damage was limited to the stove, range hood, the wall behind the stove and the cabinet area of the kitchen, according to fire chief Dave Carey.

Mrs. Reiz's daughter Colleen was injured. Carey said she burned her hand. The fire started as the result of overheated cooking oil in a deep-fryer.

Convicted murderer denied new trial

STROUDSBURG — A motion for a new trial in the case of convicted "murderer" Mrs. Linda Joyce Dixon was denied Friday by a Monroe County Court judge.

President Judge Arlington W. Williams denied the new trial request made on behalf of Mrs. Dixon who was convicted of second degree murder in November 1973 for the strangulation death of her two-year-old son, Christopher.

The body of the child was found July 24, 1973 in a plastic bag under a laurel bush about 250 feet from an abandoned house in the Hill Troop section of Analomink.

Mrs. Dixon, 23, and formerly of Analomink, was arrested three weeks later at her home in Easton.

During the two-day, non-jury trial before Judge Williams, police testified Mrs. Dixon confessed choking her son to death.

In filing for the new trial, defense attorneys John A. Hiscott and George Royle IV asserted that Mrs. Dixon's confession was not voluntary but a product of impermissible psychological coercion. The attorneys alleged she was "made" to confess and that police failed to advise her of the nature of the investigation.

In denying the motion, Judge Williams said the defendant was aware of the nature of the police investigation when a defective asked where her son was.

Williams said that although a snapshot of her son at age 10 months was shown to her during questioning, photographs of the site where the body was found and the body itself were not shown.

"They could have had no impact at all upon the functioning of the defendant's consciousness," The defense attorneys asserted the snapshot was used to breakdown or disrupt normal function of the defendant's emotions.

After being shown the snapshot, Mrs. Dixon cried for nine minutes and then said "I did it. I choked him. I choked him with my hands and left him in the woods," police testified.

Williams said in his 30-page written opinion that Mrs. Dixon revealed a condition of great emotional stress by crying.

"It is significant, however, that this condition of stress was created not by the police but by the defendant's own actions during the month-and-a-half prior" to the questioning.

Williams said the defense attorneys' assertion that Mrs. Dixon was made to confess was completely insupportable. "Her inculpatory statements were entirely voluntary."

Judge Williams ordered Mrs. Dixon to appear for sentencing upon notice from the district attorney. She could receive a maximum 20 years in prison.

Coleman views treasurer post

By FLIP DeLUCA
Pocono Record Reporter

STROUDSBURG — Robert J. Coleman of Kunkletown R.D. 1 said Friday he is confident he can do "a very good job" as Monroe County Treasurer if his nomination to succeed Thomas R. Joyce gains Senate approval.

Coleman was nominated by Gov. Milton Shapp earlier this week to fill the remaining two-and-a-half years of Joyce's unexpired term.

Coleman's name was approved by the governor and passed to the Senate which must confirm the nomination. Action on the nomination could come next week.

Joyce resigned as treasurer Monday to become highway superintendent for the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) in the county.

Coleman, 30, said he would view his appointment as treasurer as "a step ahead politically" and that he expects to find the position a challenge.

The nominee said he is confident "I can do a very good job" and he has "hopes to try for election" when the term expires.

Coleman, who is office manager of Herbert R. Imbt Inc., Saylorsburg, said when he heard of the opening for treasurer, he was interested in it. He expressed that interest to the Democratic party, in which he has been active "in a general way" for the past three years.

Coleman confirmed that his wife, Donna, is a relative to Mrs. Rena Baumgartner, chairman of the Monroe County Democratic Committee, but denied that was a deciding factor in his nomination.

With 17 out of the 18 members of the Democratic Executive Board present, Coleman said he was approved unanimously. "One person can't sway 16 other people."

Robert J. Coleman

Coleman stated that in his opinion, the results would have been the same if his wife was not a relative of the party chairman.

Coleman said he feels he is qualified for the job with his accounting and data processing background. He attended Churchman's Business College and Blackhills National Business College.

He said the $11,000 a year treasury salary "had nothing to do with" his wanting the job since his current salary at Imbt is comparable.

Originally from South Dakota, Coleman moved to Saylorsburg in 1968 and then to Kunkletown. He is a past president of the Western Pocono Jaycees and is currently a state director in the organization. He is also a member of the Young Democrats of Monroe County, and is a U.S. Army veteran, having served 13 months in Vietnam.

Coleman and his wife have a son, Robert Dayne, age 6, and a daughter, Jacqueline, three weeks.

Neighbors fear noise, traffic

By DEBORAH ENYEART
Pocono Record Reporter

EAST STROUDSBURG — A group of residents from East Stroudsburg's Sixth Ward protested a proposal to build an American Legion social hall in their area.

The residents told the East Stroudsburg Zoning Hearing Board Thursday night that the proposed building might increase noise and traffic, cause dangers to children and possibly create excess light.

Herman Smeltz, of the George N. Kemp Post Memorial Hall Association, asked the hearing board to approve a special use permit for a social hall and club room between Fourth and Fifth Streets behind Chestnut Street.

The property is almost three acres belonging to Norman Gregory, who used the land for a Christmas tree farm.

Lester Counterman, of 600 Chestnut St., said he liked the residential area and would "like to keep it residential without going commercial."

He presented the board with a petition signed by adjoining and abutting property owners who opposed the legion hall and added he had also shown the petition to borough council.

The number of people using the proposed hall might create traffic problems, social problems and a threat to children playing in the area, according to Robert J. Fritz, of 596 Chestnut St.

Legion relocation opposed

"The whole block is filled with children," Fritz said, explaining the drive from the hall would face the rear of his property.

"There may be light at my backdoor and intoxicated people coming right up into my yard. Anything could happen," he added.

Mrs. Adelaide Myers, of East Stroudsburg R.D. 5, who owns property extending from North Courtland Street to Chestnut Street, said she was concerned about the elderly in the area.

She claimed the possible noise might bother the senior citizens who "sit out back and go to bed at nine."

Mrs. Myers said she thought the borough should strictly enforce the noise ordinance and public intoxication laws if the hall is constructed, adding "There are a lot of WTCU's there."

Darrell Doll, who plans to build a residence at the intersections of Fifth and Chestnut Streets, also expressed concern about increased traffic and possible inadequate parking.

"Possibly there'll be increased traffic flow on Fifth Street, which means they'll be traversing in front of my house. I chose the lot because it's a quieter residential area than my previous location (on North Courtland)," he said.

He also said he thought the proposed 24 parking places might not be adequate parking when large social events were held at the hall.

Residents also testified that light from proposed mercury vapor lighting might overflow into the residential area.

Leo Acherman Jr., engineer for the hall association, said additional parking could be provided if it's necessary but more land would have to be cleared, creating less screening between the proposed hall and the neighbors.

Earlier in the meeting Acherman told the board that the only trees that would be removed would be those needed for construction.

The proposed one-story, T-shaped building would be constructed of cement block and covered with a brick front, Acherman said.

The building is designed to include a meeting room, cocktail lounge, kitchen and storage rooms in addition to a board room and offices.

Acherman said the plans call for five 175 watt mercury vapor lamps which would be mounted in 10 foot poles. He added the closest house was 250 to 275 feet away.

Smeltz told the board the hall association plans to install a flag pole and possibly some kind of war memento and sign to label the building.

Smeltz also described the history of the American Legion for the board members and explained several community service projects conducted by the post.

"We do many things that go unheralded. We do a lot in the community besides drinking. Some people think we're all boozers, and I'll admit there are some, but we're also a very active group in the community," he said.

Smeltz presented the board with a petition signed by 150 property owners and residents of the Sixth Ward and Stroudsburg who urged the board to grant approval of the hall association's request.

Who cares who's listed in who's who? Do you?

By JEFF WIDMER
Pocono Record Reporter
STROUDSBURG — Publications honoring outstanding students may not be as outstanding as you think.

One high school in Monroe County refuses to submit students' names to who's who type publishers because of complaints from parents. Two other county high schools have limited to whom they send student names.

The National Assn. of Secondary School Principals of Reston, Va. has condemned all who's who type publications as exploiting students' vanity and parents' pride in their children.

And most of the students, parents and educators questioned by The Record felt being chosen as outstanding by a principal is an honor, but the books themselves are worthless.

The three major who's who type books in Monroe and Pike County schools are "Who's Who Among American High School Students", "Outstanding Teenagers of America" and "The Society of Distinguished American High School Students."

Other publications include

"Outstanding Elementary Teachers of America", "Outstanding Secondary Educators of America" and "Who's Who Among American College and University Students."

The books are about the size of a volume of an encyclopedia, run up to 800 pages and sell from $17 to $24. Each contain biographies of students and teachers who were nominated by high school principals.

Most publishers ask for students' and teachers' names, addresses, scholastic and community activities and, in the case of students, career choices. Some publishers ask for the names and address of the students' grandparents.

Publishers said it is an honor to be listed in one of their books. Some students and parents think the only people who benefit from the books are the publishers.

"It might be considered an honor by some students, but I think it's just a profit making operation," said Sheila Smith, a graduate of Pleasant Valley High School who was nominated for inclusion in one of the books.

Mrs. Matthew Kaslik of Arrowhead Lake Estates, whose sons were nominated for a number of volumes, agreed. "They (her sons) decided they have better things to spend their money on than to buy a list of names."

"And to what avail?" she commented on the value of buying the volume. "They don't know anybody in it."

Not only are the books crammed with unfamiliar names, but one local guidance counselor questioned the validity of the honor. The counselor said a low achiever in the school showed up in a volume and convinced that teacher that the publishers do not check for deception.

Russell J. Emele, director of the library at East Stroudsburg State College, said he does not stock those honor books because they are useless as research works. Unlike the more famous "Who's Who in America," these are published biographies of students who have not achieved worldly fame, he said.

As another blow to who's who publishers, admissions directors pay little attention to honors of this type, according to Alan T. Chesterton, assistant to the director of admissions at East Stroudsburg State College.

Chesterton said "Admission is based on class rank and scholastic aptitude tests" only.

Local guidance counselors agreed. Some questioned the accuracy of biographical information submitted by students themselves and apparently not checked by the who's who type publishers.

Nancy Laird, a public relations woman for Educational Communications — which publishes "Who's Who Among American High School Students" — said information students submit is not checked.

She said the company counts on school principals and guidance counselors to choose the best students, but the publisher sets no criteria by which to judge the nominees.

The final objection to who's who type publications is their appeal to vanity, according to students who have been nominated.

To protect students from being exploited, Stroudsburg High School stopped submitting their names, a guidance counselor there said.

The principal of Pleasant Valley High School, Charles Arnold, said he is "personally

Sales promotion upsets relatives

ing Teenagers" pestered her grandparents to buy the volume.

Miss Nash said not only did Outstanding Americans of Montgomery, Ala. send her three pitches by mail to buy the book, but also sent three notices to her grandparents.

"At first I thought it was an honor," said her mother, Mrs. Richard Nash. "Then they started sending notices. When I found out they were sending them to the grandparents, that got me perturbed."

Charles Arnold, principal of Pleasant Valley High School in Broadheadsville, said he stopped submitting students' names to two who's who type publishers because of complaints from parents like Mrs. Nash.

"Not only were the parents asked on several occasions by mail to buy the book, but the grandparents were also solicited," he said.

so the school submits their names.

Sister Virginia Mary, principal of Pocono Central Catholic School in Cresco, went further and said the recognition, when publicized, "serves to bolster these kids and gives others something to work toward."

Bernice Pollan, a guidance counselor at Pocono Mountain High School in Swiftwater, said the school participates in two honors programs because the publishers offer scholarships.

Mrs. Maureen E. Farr of Port Jervis, N.Y., an elementary teacher in the Matamoras School, said the honor was in having her superior choose her for "Outstanding Elementary Teachers of America."

Mrs. Farr said she bought the volume this year "for my own children. They think it's a big deal."

Although his biography was printed in the larger and well-known volume Marquis "Who's Who in the East," Robert L. Williams said he bought the $45 book because he "felt obligated to buy it."

The associate professor at East Stroudsburg State College added, "I wanted to see what it was all about, and see who else was in it."

As a consequence, he said he is flooded with mail — usually related to his field of audiology — and is convinced names published in these types of books are picked up by companies who use them in their direct-mail campaigns.

While one parent bought one of the books as a memento of her child's achievement, another denounced the volumes as purely money makers for the publishers.

Publishers, quite naturally, denied they were in it for the money.

Les Siegleman, executive director of The Society of Distinguished American High School Students in Birmingham, Ala. said the rewards of membership in his society are similar to those gained when a person joins Phi Delta Kappa.

"It is considered an honor to be in there (in one of the volumes)," one local guidance counselor said. But, he added, "Students are not aware the company is trying to sell books. I can't say they (the companies) are dishonest."

Summing up the prevailing attitude about the books, he concluded, "I guess you put it on the shelf and it gathers dust."

Two-time world champion retires at age 36

Racing great Graham Hill ends career

NORTHAMPTON, England (UPI) — Graham Hill, the "old man" of Grand Prix racing announced his retirement Friday to bring down the checkered flag on an illustrious 20-year career that included two world driving championships.

The 46-year-old Briton made his decision at Silverstone as drivers of a new era practiced nearby for today's British Grand Prix.

"I came to the conclusion while sitting in the car after the Belgian Grand Prix in May that I should no longer drive Formula One cars," Hill said.

Hill, who became driver-manager of his own team, Embassy Racing, two years ago, explained: "It has become increasingly unfair to my two young drivers to compete against them in important races. We have the makings of a good team and my job now is to manage. After all, that is a full time job in itself."

Hill has an unrivaled career as a driver. He took part in a record 176 Grand Prix, won world titles with BRM in 1962 and Lotus in 1968 and is the only driver to gain a world title, win the Indianapolis 500 and capture the Le Mans 24 hours race.

Hill first drove competitively at 25 and graduated from mechanic to Grand Prix driver four years later. Soon after scoring his record fifth Monaco Grand Prix in 1969, Hill broke both his legs in a crash during the U.S. Grand Prix at Watkins Glen.

It was feared he would never walk again. Yet, after months in hospital, then a wheelchair, his fighting spirit helped him not only to regain the full use of his legs, but also put him back at the wheel of a racing car.

His narrow escape did not dull his enthusiasm.

"Risking your life makes you appreciate living all the more. I think it important that a man experiences danger from time to time."

He has not driven in Formula One since the International Trophy Race at Silverstone in May and his last Grand Prix was in Brazil in February.

Ann Landers

Cop out parents

Dear Ann Landers: I'm a 30-year-old mother of four children who is sick and tired of hearing parents cop out when it comes to correcting their children.

The two most over-used excuses are, "Oh, he'll grow out of it. This is just a stage he's going through" — and, "Ignore it. He's trying to get my dander up. He'll quit pretty soon."

What are parents for, anyway? Aren't they supposed to discipline their children? Or do they think it's enough that they feed, house, clothe them and sit by with their eyes closed and mouths shut and let them "go through phases"?

When I was growing up, I knew exactly what was expected of me and how far I could go. I'm grateful for those firm guidelines. They relieved me of a lot of decision-making and kept me out of trouble.

I hope every parent who reads your column will ask himself, "Who is setting the standards and drawing the perimeters for my child?" Is it the TV, the neighborhood gang or YOU? Values and limits should be established by Mother and Dad. —

Concerned About Today's Youth

Dear Concerned: Thank you for an excellent letter. I hope you woke up a few moribund brains.

Dear Ann Landers: I must comment on the letter from "Bothered And Bewildered" because her daughter Nancy is identical to ours, only we had an added problem — drugs.

My husband and I went through hell trying to get that girl straightened out. Nothing worked. Finally, my sister, who lives 350 miles away, asked if she could take our daughter "for a while." My misgivings were the same as Nancy's parents', but out of sheer desperation, we said yes.

Within three months there was a tremendous change in that child — a complete turnaround of her behavior and attitude. We visited her last weekend and were amazed.

Please tell "Bothered" two things: (1) She hasn't lost a daughter. Nancy will be back. (2) The pressure removed from the parents is an absolute blessing. Separation gives both parents and child a completely different perspective. It turns out that my sister was a lot stronger than I thought.

Remind him of time

By Jean Adams

TARDY: (Q.) Maybe I'm dumb to bother about it, but Ronnie doesn't call me when he says he will. Usually it's two or three hours later. When I ask him why, he says he was playing ball or listening to records or something.

Do you think he is telling the truth? Do you think he is bored with me? I certainly don't want to break up. The past 10 months with him have been the best time of my life.

Always Waiting in New York

(A.) Ronnie probably is like a lot of teenagers. Time gets away from him. It is fun to ignore time, but it isn't business-like in today's world.

Don't push him, but keep subtly suggesting to him that he should be more punctual. One way is to not sit and wait for him to call but to follow your regular schedule. If you are gone and he misses you a few times he may start remembering to call at the time set.

STILL: (Q.) There's this boy Anthony that I'm still in love with. We were true lovers about a year ago. Every day he's different. Some days he says sweet words to me. Other days he barely looks at me. He's always telling people he hates me.

I can't understand him. I mean, what is he trying to prove? I don't bug him or anything although I'm still deeply in love with him.

Wondering in South Carolina

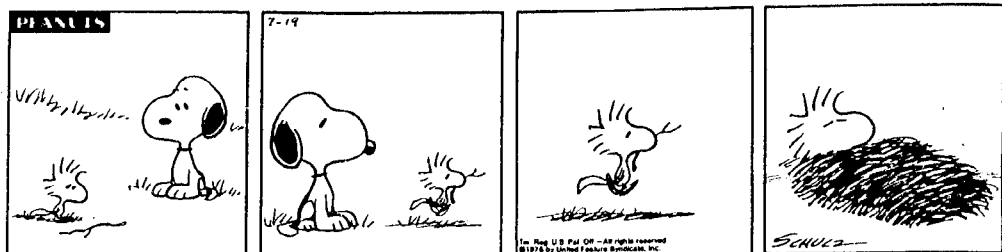

(A.) Are you certain you don't pursue him in some way? Are you sure you don't hunt him out, arrange to be where he is, watch him, maybe even start conversations with him? If you honestly haven't been doing any of these intrusive things, go to him and ask him why he tells people he hates you. This will tell him you are still interested in him. He may still be interested in you.

(Write to Jean Adams, in care of The Pocono Record, P.O. Box 2402, Houston, Tex., 77001. Every letter is read, but because of the great number received Jean Adams cannot send personal answers.)

Dear Mother: Thanks for your supportive letter. I got plenty of heat for suggesting that Nancy be housed "elsewhere." Some "experts" called it "rejection," others called it "abandonment."

Sometimes parents and children need a rest from each other and a change of scenery can work wonders.

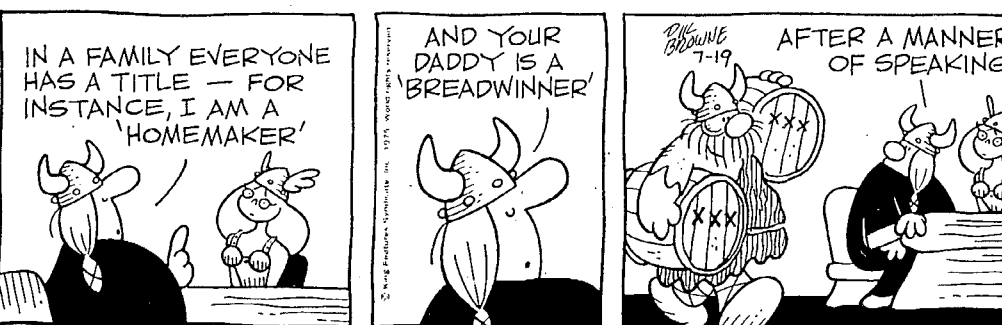

Is pot a drug? Can L.S.D. and pills open new worlds for you? Stop guessing. Get the facts in Ann Landers's new booklet, "Straight Dope on Drugs." For each booklet ordered, send a dollar bill, plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope (20 cents postage) to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 1400, Elgin, Ill. 60120.

The bidding:

Opening lead — ten of diamonds.

It is not difficult to defeat four spades if you see all 52 cards. West leads his singleton diamond and East returns a diamond after taking the ace. West ruffs, returns a heart to East's ace, and ruffs another diamond to put the contract down one.

But this is the proper method of defense even if East-West do not see each other's hands. True, they have several hurdles along the way, but they are not really hard to negotiate.

First comes the question of West's opening lead. With such a poor hand facing a partner who passed as dealer, West should reason that there is no possibility of stopping four spades on high-card strength alone, and that the only real chance lies in obtaining diamond ruffs. Accordingly, he should lead a diamond.

Second, when East wins the ace, he should not be tempted to play the ace of hearts before returning a diamond. If he falls into this error, South makes the contract.

Also, in returning a diamond at trick two, East must not lead any old diamond — he should lead his highest diamond, the nine. In selecting this card, East applies the suit-direction convention to guide West to a heart play next rather than a club.

The high-diamond return directs West to lead the higher-ranking suit, as between hearts and clubs. If East held the ace of clubs, if East held the ace of hearts, he would return the deuce of diamonds to direct the low-suit return of a club.

When West ruffs the diamond at trick two, he therefore returns a heart.

Clear thinking and close cooperation enable East-West to find the right defense as if guided by radar. They don't have to see all 52 cards.

Voice of Broadway

NEW YORK—It's nice — and maybe lucky — to run across someone who seems to have everything going right for him; and Burt Bacharach fits in that mold. Not only is the prize-winning composer of "Raindrops Keep Fallin' on My Head" and countless other hit melodies a success as a songwriter, a star of his own periodical TV specials, and successful restaurateur, but Burt is also the husband of Angie Dickinson, star of NBC's popular "Police Woman" series. You can't beat that.

Who knows maybe some of his good luck will rub off on you. Anyway here's Burt:

"They say that the more things change the more they are the same. It seems like only yesterday (we like to believe it was only yesterday) that I met Hal David, and we set out to try to conquer Tin Pan Alley. A publisher provided us with a small room equipped with a piano and two chairs. It was in the Brill Building, and we went to work in a world of tradition. All the ingredients were there, and it looked so easy — on paper. Yes, I figured I had worked with so many singers I would know exactly what to provide them with — and that Hal and I would be on our way to fame and fortune in a week or so, even a month.

"But the assembly line didn't work out. We wrote about ten songs a day — and they sounded that way. What happened to them? I can't even remember the titles. It was a sobering experience. We wrote a couple of hundred over a ten month period — and not one song was published. So I went back to work as accompanist for such singers as Joel Grey, Steve Lawrence, Georgia Gibbs and finally — Marlene Dietrich.

"But Hal and I kept plugging away for a long time till we hit upon a formula that seemed just right for us. We were blessed with one hit after another. We were really on our way — and then something happened and we went our separate ways. But the separation wasn't permanent. Now, only a stone's throw from the Brill Building, we are writing together again — just like that. No big deal... It was destined to happen. I'm happy to report that the re-teaming has gone smoother than I could ever hope for. We went to work as if we had left each other only the night before. To date we have completed ten songs.

And that brings me to another phase of the business. I don't pretend to be classified as an elder statesman but I am often asked to advise hopeful songwriters. I think of one word that is so important — patience! A newcomer will have to be fortified with more patience than he could ever imagine could be required of a human being. There are no miracles in this business. A writer must have absolute confidence in himself — or herself, of course. Set a goal and stick to it under all adversity. It's always been that way. It also helps to have a set of parents who have confidence in you and insist that sticking to the keys is more important at times than playing stick ball with the other kids.

"Of course, what works for one writer can prove disaster for another. I hit on a method and went at it with a fury. But the real proof of the pudding comes with the recording. That's when you really have to nurse your brainchild. I orchestrate and conduct. If it's my baby, it's going to be done my way and I'll have no one to blame but myself.

"Looking over the music scene I'd say it's greater than ever. A lot of great new talent around. I feel sorry for those veteran composers who listen to some of the new product and shrug it off with "I wouldn't be associated with such trash." Bunk! They are afraid to face the challenge. They are missing the entire concept and they are also missing the boat. You can't fool the kids who buy the records. They are with it and you must get with them.

"If anyone ever asks you how long it takes to write a hit, ask him if anyone ever asked how long it took Rembrandt to paint a portrait.

"Of course, music is an important part of my life. But I don't want anyone to think for a minute that it keeps me from devoting time to making a success of my marriage to Angie Dickinson. Angie and I learned to cope. Not with our careers but in spite of them.

"And, to be sure, there's that great little catalyst, Nikki, our nine-year-old daughter. She survived an almost tragic premature birth. Now she's a very bright, outstanding ballet and drama student. How's that for a blessing from above?

"As for Angie, what can I tell you? I did predict, when she signed for her series, that she'd emerge as a TV star and now the Nielsen indicate she's way up there. She demanded that there'd be no studio calls at 5 in the morning, lasting till midnight. She wanted to be home with Nikki and me for a real family scene. And I do get closer to Nikki when I serve as baby-sitter many days.

"Now with all this, you may ask why I ever went into the restaurant business with my two places on Long Island, the Dover House in Westbury and Rothmann's Inn, East Norwich, adjacent to the New Norwich Motor Inn. To tell you the truth it was all the idea of my extraordinary business manager, Fred Braunstein. He has guided my finances ever since I was a drop in his financial bucket.

"As for the restaurants, they are not a hobby; they are invested with my hard-earned money. As long as they bear my name, they'll have to be as perfect as possible. Don't get me wrong. I can't be in three places at one time. I have to depend on Fred and Nick and Ron Mastroianni, two highly competent brothers who were raised on the Island and in the restaurant business. They call a lot of the shots. But I come back East very often to see what's going on. Once in a while there'll be a letter of complaint from a customer. Not unusual considering that we serve hundreds of thousands of meals a year. I make a through investigation and make certain that any fault is corrected."

Working from scratch big part of YOR Theater allure

BELVIDERE, N.J.— When a downpour hit the other day, the staff of the YOR Theater stopped preparations for its latest play long enough to deal with the problem of water dripping on the stage.

The leaky roof was not viewed as a catastrophic problem by the group, only another challenge — like finding a facility to house the theater or building the props with materials scavenged from a dump.

It is not Broadway theater and it is not just a bunch of inexperienced amateurs either. The theater started in the summer of 1971 when the small Belvidere High School graduated a class with an exceptionally large number of students oriented toward theater.

"We had a high school group that was so talented we extended it all into summer," said Paul DeCoste, the founder. He directed most of the plays until this year.

Most of the original members of the troupe have returned each summer and participation has broadened to include community residents ranging in age "from 7 to 70."

Several of the students pursued theatrical training in college and some of the members have obtained degrees and are continuing at the graduate level. Some taking part are getting independent study credit through East Stroudsburg State College.

YOR cooperates with other area theaters, DeCoste said, and some local talent seen in other theaters sometimes performs at YOR. The reverse is also the case.

The group works hard, with limited resources, to put on a new show about every two weeks until the weather becomes too cold late in September.

"Each show should pay for the next show" is the financial principle that guides the group, DeCoste said. Nobody is salaried.

"It's just 100 per cent volunteer work," DeCoste said. "We're not amateurs and we are not professionals. We are artists."

The stage is supported with crates from a dump. Many of the stage lights were made with institutional size tin cans. Much of the furniture of the set was borrowed from a used furniture dealer.

The seats are old folding chairs and the theater building is a century-old feed and grain mill. YOR used several vacant store fronts before finding the mill.

Though the group has little to work with, it is adequate.

YOR Theater more a workshop

and the members say they would rather struggle because they learn more and it forces them to use their imagination.

Admission is held to $2, $1 for students — live entertainment for less than the cost of a movie.

Providing entertainment in a society very much oriented toward receiving entertainment is self-fulfilling and it provides a summer activity for the people of Belvidere, especially the young, DeCoste said.

Four plays have been presented this year and a few more are planned. Tonight and tomorrow night, YOR is presenting "The Miracle Worker" by William Gibson. A children's play is planned for later this month.

No set summer schedule is established and followed for the season as is the case with other area theaters. That was tried last summer and found to be too hectic.

The group found it needs and benefits from more flexibility than a schedule will allow. Many of the participants have jobs that limit the amount of time they can spend on theater and some are only available for certain weeks when they do not have commitments to other theaters.

"It's been a workshop, experimental kind of theater," DeCoste said. Name plays are often selected and the playwright whose work has probably been performed the most is Tennessee Williams. Members drift in and out of involvement with individual productions but a core group remains.

"It's a group of people who have really worked together for years" is the way DeCoste described YOR. Now the newer, younger members are learning from the older, more experienced members.

Krissy Hay, a 10-year-old who wrote and directed her own play while in second grade, is starring in "The Miracle Worker." Her mother and sister occasionally get parts too.

One-act plays are sometimes selected for performance because of the training opportunities they offer. One of the greatest rewards is to watch the accomplishment of a half dozen people, developing into themselves and sharing their talents, DeCoste said.

Most of the productions are set up as three-quarter-round theater. "Sinking, Sinking," a musical comedy by David Csonotos, has tentatively been selected to be performed next. The dates have not been set.

Paul Jerrett, 27, has replaced DeCoste as director, organizer and general manager of the theater. Previously, he often acted and he has switched roles with DeCoste, who has a part in "The Miracle Worker."

Jerrett, acting since he was 16, has appeared in over 50 shows and has done technical work for more than 30 more. DeCoste, also 27, taught theater at Belvidere High School when he started the YOR (then called Youth Organized Repertoire) and he now teaches theater and history at Vernon Township High School.

DeCoste, after several years of directing, is back on stage and is doing graduate study in theater.

Musical at Pocono Playhouse

MOUNTAINHOME — Flying the bright colors of the Roaring Twenties, Sandy Wilson's "The Boy Friend" sails into the Rowena Stevens Pocono Playhouse on July 22, anchoring for two weeks of musical merriment (through Aug. 2) with Pocono favorite Anne Russell at the helm of a crew of the liveliest young singers and dancers of the Broadway stage.

Lovely, red-headed Miss Russell, making her triumphant return to the mountains, played to rave reviews for her starring roles in '72 and '73 at the Mountainhome summer theatre in the hit musicals, "Hello, Dolly!" and "Mame." In "The Boy Friend," this popular singing actress takes the role of husbandless-but-hunting Madame Dubonnet, headmistress of a fashionable finishing school for "Perfect Young Ladies" on the French Riviera.

Here, on the beach and at a ball, singing and dancing their hearts out, Polly, Maisie, Dulcie, Fay and Nancy finally manage, after a few minor heartaches, to capture the boys of their dreams — Tony, Bobby, Marcel, Pierre and Alphonse — under the tutelage of Mme. Dubonnet, who, it turns out, has a way of her own with the object of her affections.

The role of Polly in this exuberant musical of the period will be played by gorgeous blue-eyed and blonde Neva Rae Powers, who created the role in the New York revival of the show this season. Her Tony is in the capable hands, big voice and dancing feet of handsome William James, who plays the poor American boy who falls in love with the rich English girl posing as a poor girl — only in this case, the poor boy turns out to be a rich boy in disguise.

On Broadway, before going half-way round the world and back with "Hello, Dolly!" and starring nationally in "Mame," Anne Russell appeared as Lily in "Flora the Red Menace" with Liza Minnelli. Other successes include the national companies of "Gypsy" and "Carnival" and starring roles in "Forty Carats" and in "Never Too Late" with Eddie Bracken on tour.

The cast of 15 in the perennially popular "The Boy Friend" is being directed by Forrest Carter, who has staged more than 20 successful productions of this show from coast to coast.

Bound to send theatre patrons on a humming binge, the zippy songs and red-hot hoofing dance numbers in this charming and disarming musical include such favorites as "Won't You Charleston With Me?", "I Could Be Happy With You" and, of course, "The Boy Friend" itself.

Following "The Boy Friend," Playhouse manager Jack Lovett brings in for one week only, Aug. 5-9, stage and screen star Sandy Dennis in Tennessee Williams' Pulitzer Prize-winner, "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," a play of "tremendous dramatic impact," according to the New York Post.

Tanglwood presents comedy

TAFTON — Now well into the summer months, the Tanglwood Dinner Theatre readies to open its third production on July 22, with Leslie Steven's "The Marriage-Go-Round."

A highly entertaining, sophisticated comedy, the production will feature Margaret Gwenver, George Hall, Raymond Thorne and Carla Torgimson.

Imagine a happily-married, highly intelligent, middle-aged couple, who, as they calmly await the arrival of the daughter of a Swedish colleague, suddenly find themselves faced with a ravishing Scandinavian beauty. This temptress though, is no dumb blonde, for she has come to the United States with one plan in mind — to have the "perfect baby." She has chosen this unexpected husband as the father and has devised the most clever means to break down his defenses.

Carla Torgimson, in her debut at Tanglwood, plays the troublesome Swede. An actress with extensive credits, Carla has played in "Pygmalion,"

Carla Torgimson

"Mr. Roberts," "Murder in the Cathedral," "Plaza Suite" and many others. She will be recognized by many from her commercials: Burger King, Trouble After Shave . . . Her acting work ruffling the feathers of George Hall, as the husband, and Margaret Gwenver, as the wife, is among her best and funniest.

Outstanding is the only word that befits the theatre credits accumulated by actor George Hall. George made his Broadway debut nearly 30 years ago and has since appeared in numerous other shows, most notably, "Lend an Ear," "Touch and Go," "The Live Wire," "The Boy Friend," "There's A Girl in My Soup," and this season's "We Interrupt This Program."

A graduate of the world-famous Neighborhood Playhouse, George was one of the first male members of the Martha Graham Dance Company. He has appeared in stock and regional theatres.

Many will recognize George from the CBS-TV program, "The Edge of Night," where he appears regularly as "John," the Whitney butler.

Earlier this season, George had charmed Tanglwood audiences in his appearance as "Fred Whitten" in the season's opener, "Finishing Touches."

Waring Workshop singers to present poolside concert

Peter Keifer leads Waring Workshopppers through their summer paces

SHAWNEE-ON-DELAWARE — Vocalists from all over America will present an evening of "Songs of Americana" Thursday in a poolside concert at Fred Waring's Shawnee Inn.

Freedom will be the theme of the program, which is oriented to the nation's bicentennial. The concert will be presented by students of the Waring Music Workshop, now in its 29th year of operation.

The workshop is an intensive nine-day course in the basic elements of choral music. The high school and college students, from as far away as Alaska, are strangers when the workshop begins, but in the short time that they are singing together, they prepare for a polished performance that has been popular among local residents in years past.

"A musical history of America's music" is planned, according to Peter Kiefer, managing director of the workshop. The group of more than 130 students will sing a variety of songs.

A chronological program is tentatively planned that will include songs ranging from the Revolutionary War period to the present, including gospel music, folk songs and patriotic music.

A second concert, with a similar program but with a different workshop group of students, is planned for Aug. 14.

The workshop is held at East Stroudsburg State College. In the event of rain, the concerts will be moved indoors to the Koehler Fieldhouse there.

The workshop students are taught by a staff of 10 professionals, including Waring, who conducts the Pennsylvanians, a nationally known choral group, and has 58-years experience as a showman, choral director and educator.

As the students rehearse for the Shawnee concert, they receive instruction in sight singing, music theory, staging, lighting, and recording and sound techniques. Schools and churches often send small groups of students to represent themselves.

Some of the students plan to pursue music professionally and others are amateur directors of choral groups. They range in age from 15 to 23.

Long days of rehearsals precede the concerts. Students practice from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. most days, with breaks for meals. At the end, they present a fully choreographed show.

During the first two days the workshop meets, the instructors feel out the group, determining their weak and strong points. The staff establishes what the group is capable of memorizing.

"Every group has its own characteristics," Kiefer explained. To select the songs to be included in the program, more than 100 songs may be tried out on the group, he said.

In most cases, the students will never have seen the music before they learn it for the show. Less than one third of the students participated in the workshop during a previous summer.

In addition to the two student workshops, two adult workshops are also held. During the adult workshops, a greater portion of the time is spent learning the techniques of choral direction. Participants are directors of school, college, church, community and industrial choruses.

Dr. John Raymond is dean of the workshop. He is associate professor and director of music at Lafayette College in Easton. Raymond has been on the workshop staff since 1948.

The workshop concerts have been an annual event at Shawnee Inn. They are held on the lawn and have a backdrop of weeping willow trees. Swimming pools are to one side and the Delaware River is in the background.

Before last year, the concerts were free but the cost of putting them on became prohibitive. Reserve chair seating is available for $2.50. General admission lawn space for spectator's own blankets or lawn chairs is $1.

Children under 12 will be admitted free. Tickets are available at 107 Stroud Hall at the college, at Sleep's Music and at Wyckoff's department store in the giftwrap department. Surplus proceeds benefit the Workshop Scholarship Fund.

The music is set to begin at 8:30 p.m. Several local residents are participating in the workshop. They are: Ann Young, Brodheadville; Elizabeth Wyckoff, Shawnee; Karen Smith, Stephanie Siegfried, Beth Martin and Susan De Santoro, Stroudsburg; and Linda Mutchler, East Stroudsburg.

2nd Act to stage trilogy

EAST STROUDSBURG — Three one-act plays will be the next presentation of the Second Act Summer Theatre on the campus of East Stroudsburg State College.

"Morning," by Israel Horowitz, "Noon," by Terrance McNally and "Night," by Laurence Melfi, will be presented at the theatre tonight and Sunday and July 24-27.

"Morning" is a racial satire that deals with the problems of a black family who have taken a pill to turn white. "Noon" is a sexual farce about an assorted group of people who answer a want ad for various reasons. "Night" is a psychological drama that explores the various emotions of several persons at a funeral.

Among those appearing in the one-acts will be Paul Knaak, Sal Moccardi and Jim Bisbing of Stroudsburg, Molly Phillips of Wilkes-Barre and James Sando of Hazelton. Others featured include Mike Booth and Earl Bethel.

Dr. J. J. Brennan, ESSC Speech Communication and Theatre Arts chairperson, will direct. He also serves as coordinator of the Summer Theatre program. Technical direction is under the supervision of SCTA professor Philip Hendren.

Because of the material in the play, parental discretion is recommended.

Curtain for each performance will be 8 p.m. Reservations may be obtained by calling the Second Act box office at (717) 424-3483, and will be held until 7:55 each evening. If you want to drink here, better know the rules

By JOE RATTMAN
Pocono Record Reporter
STROUDSBURG — It became lawful to buy a drink past 10 p.m. on Sundays recently, but so far the effect of legislation extending the closing time of some bars remains unclear.

To opponents of drinking, the quick signing of the bill into law by Gov. Shapp after it finally cleared the state legislature was another setback, following relatively quickly the repeal of Pennsylvania's "Blue Laws" against Sunday sales a few years ago.

Again, the Pocono Mountains Vacation Bureau (PMVB) was a chief proponent of the effort to relax the liquor laws. Robert Uguccioni, executive director of the PMVB, said his group drafted the legislation that led to the hours change. The new law permits a 2 a.m. closing time instead of 10 p.m. on Sundays for certain establishments that have a special $200 license. It affects hotels, restaurants, clubs and other establishments that previously were able to operate on Sunday if their bar trade made up no more than 40 per cent of their sales.

The 40 per cent rule was a compromise accepted by backers of the Sunday sales bill. The Pennsylvania Tavern Association wants the restriction removed and the PMVB is "somewhat sympathetic," Uguccioni said. But he added, "I think that's really the problem of the tavern owners." He noted that some saloon keepers don't want to be open and consequently, there is not a groundswell of support for a change.

Reaction to the hours extension by resort and restaurant owners was mixed. Most qualify for longer hours but not all will take advantage of the opportunity. Few restaurants serve past 10 p.m. anyway and they often close their bars along with their kitchens. Some places that feature Friday and Saturday night entertainment, such as the Sheraton-Pocono Inn, are adding Sunday entertainment during the extended hours.

At the Inn at Tannersville, Sunday was already a busy day since there is afternoon and early evening music. Closing time was pushed to midnight but will not be later, owner Stephen Jakubowicz said, because he and the staff are too tired after a long day.

Uguccioni said the legislation is a "shot in the arm" to the restaurant and resort owners, will help promote three-day weekends and will benefit convention business. But David Artzt, owner of Pocmont, one of the area's largest resorts, had doubts.

"I don't see where it's going to benefit the resort hotel," Artzt said. "I don't think it will affect us at all," he said. The extra income to be made by staying open a few extra hours may be eaten up by the cost of paying employees' salaries, he said.

Pocmont runs a nightclub with a band and show every night but Sunday, he explained, and the staff entertainers need a day off. In place of the club, he said, movies are run on Sunday nights. The conventions might be drawn to the area even if the earlier closing time meant that they had to drink in their rooms, he said.

Some of the drinking establishments open on Sundays have a beer take-out service. The only other places to get beer to go are beer distributors, but they are closed on Sundays by law. That gives business a boost at the places with take-out which stay open.

"We'll sell 10 times as much (to take out) on Sunday as we will during the rest of the week," said Lee Bowman, bartender at Albino's Restaurant in East Stroudsburg. Other restaurants contacted reported better Sunday take-out business. Bars can sell no more than 144 ounces to take out, meaning two six-packs or four quarts. However, bartenders say the restriction is easily circumvented by customers who want more by taking their purchase out to their car and returning for a second buy.

Beer distributors sell only by the case. The tourist trade enhances their business. We had our best day ever last Memorial Day," said David Olenick, owner of Eagle Valley beer distributor in East Stroudsburg. He would oppose allowing beer distributors to open on Sundays because it's his only day off and competition would force him to open if others did.

Many visitors to the area are surprised that bottles of liquor and wine are sold only at "State Stores," that cases of beer are available only at distributors, rather than at grocery stores, and that many bars close on Sundays. The legal drinking age is 21, compared to 18 in neighboring New Jersey and New York.

Efforts to lower the drinking age have repeatedly been defeated in the legislature as have other suggested reforms. The PMVB is studying proposals to let 18-year-olds drink and to turn liquor stores over to private enterprise," Uguccioni said.

"We haven't really done any lobbying on any one of those issues," Uguccioni said. We do have kind of an important role in these things because of the nature of our area — being dependent on tourism," he added. The PMVB views the changes that have come about as a matter of allowing visitors to the area similar conveniences as those in neighboring states.

"We get a lot of comments about the Pennsylvania law from tourists," said beer distributor owner Olenick. "They can't understand why they can't get beer in here," said Stephen Sobrinsky, co-manager of the State Store in Stroud Shopping Center. The state stores do not advertise. Sobrinsky said, nor do they erect signs on the highway so many customers did not know about the store for more than two years after it was in operation.

The Stroud Shopping Center State Store is one of two supermarket-style liquor stores in the area. Both are along Rte. 611 and the other is in Mount Pocono. Prices are the same in all state stores and it is illegal to transport alcohol from or into the state without a permit. Wines are cheaper here than in New Jersey. Liquor is often cheaper than in neighboring states too, but Sobrinsky warned that the savings may be deceptive because the alcohol content per volume is sometimes less here for the same brands sold in the other states.

"There are a lot of things that Pennsylvania does not carry that other states do carry," said Joanne Lucas, manager of the Main Street Stroudsburg State Store. No liquor sales are run by the State Stores but prices sometimes are lowered, Sobrinsky said. An imported white wine selling for $3.24 was recently lowered to $2.19, he said. Bars are not permitted to sell whole bottles.

Proof of age, consisting of a driver's license, draft card or a Liquor Control Board (LCB) I.D., is required. Two types of identification are preferred, Lucas said, but one will be accepted. The state stores have applications for the LCB card and applicants must furnish two proofs of age and two one-inch square photographs.

The State Stores give a five per cent discount to customers who buy by the case. They will remain closed on Sundays. But now liquor by the drink will be available until 2 a.m. every day of the week. Resort and night club owner David Artzt isn't sure what it is going to mean for area businesses. "If it's going to help out anyone at all it's great," he said.

Pocono resorts get nod

STROUDSBURG — In the May issue of Better Homes & Gardens magazine, an article was published on Outstanding Vacation Resorts in the Northeast.

Their intent was to endorse only "full-service" resorts where families with varied interests can find enough diverse pastimes to satisfy everyone's tastes. At least one representative from their Travel and Transportation staff visited each resort and wrote an extensive on-the-scene evaluation.

Throughout their article resorts from Maine, New York, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Pennsylvania shared the spotlight. In the State of Pennsylvania six resorts were highlighted . . . out of those six, five were in the Pocono Mountains. Those resorts mentioned include the following: The Antlers Lodge, Swiftwater; Buck Hill Inn, Buck Hill Falls; Pocono Manor Inn & Golf Club, Pocono Manor; Skytop Lodge, Skytop and White Beauty View Resort on Lake Wallenpaupack.

Robert Uguccioni, executive director of the Pocono Mountains Vacation Bureau, said "we are delighted that this excellent magazine has picked five of our resorts to single out for excellence."

Reconstructed version of Ed Garris' general store, doubling as bank and post office

Millbrook Village — even Ed Garris would know it

By AMY TALLIA
Special Writer

MILLBROOK, N. J. — Time was when Ed Garris would hitch up his team and journey to the Gap to get supplies for his general store. The 30-mile trip along a narrow, winding dirt road often washed out by rises in the temperamental Delaware was no light-hearted jaunt.

When Garris returned late in the cool of that summer's evening, he was a tired man loaded with more than dry goods. He carefully rethought the details of the war news and railroad talk he had heard that day. Tomorrow his customers would gather eagerly in his store as he passed on the information; news from outside parts was a rare treat.

The sweaty team picked up its pace as it rounded the final bend. Baying strays greeted Garris and his rig while they joggled past a cluster of white washed clapboard buildings.

Home again, sighed Garris. Millbrook 1860.

"When we're finished, we want it to look, feel, sound and smell like a village of the 1870s," said Jane Broderick, National Park Service historian, as she outlined the aims of the Service's newest environmental education project in the Delaware Water Gap Recreation Area.

The restoration of Ed Garris' home town, Millbrook, was begun in 1971. Two years later an arsonist's fire destroyed several of the reconstructed buildings, temporarily halting the project. However, park historians and technicians steadfastly continued their efforts and last weekend the village enjoyed its grand opening.

Homes, a blacksmith's forge, a church, general store, and school house, all authentically reconstructed and furnished with historically accurate period pieces were opened to the public.

Lamps are filled with oil, the spinning wheels are in operation, one hundred year old letters fill the post office, and the forge will be ready for business any day now.

"No major event ever occurred in Millbrook," said Broderick. In fact, the village peaked around 1890 and dwindled to ghost town status shortly after when the newly built railroad chose to by-pass it.

Why then all this fuss over Millbrook?

The answer, as Broderick explained, is "living history," a new educational concept being developed by the Park Service for use at its many historical sites.

Instead of concentrating on traditional museums with their "glass case, don't touch atmosphere," said Broderick, projects like the Millbrook Village restoration attempt to pass on "feeling" along with the facts of history.

Ray Fauber, an associate of Broderick, added that when faithfully recreated such a village is "an invaluable tool in showing the lifestyle of the people of an area one hundred years ago."

Each item displayed in the village, every farm tool, package of seed, or calendar is at least a century old. Many of the articles were donated by descendants of the town's original residents. Park historians have carefully traced the family histories of those early inhabitants by means of old town records.

These records, supplemented by the vivid memories of senior citizens from the area who still remember what Millbrook was like in its heyday, have enabled the Park Service to rebuild and even refurnish the buildings exactly as they were in 1890.

Visitors to Millbrook are given a tour of the village by Park Service guides. These specially trained guides, are called "interpreters" because they not only recite dates and figures pertinent to the period, they also relate modern day living to the daily activity of 1890. Through the eyes of the interpreter, the carefully preserved site throbs into the real, breathing, colorful community it once was.

"They look at the specifics of life now," said Broderick, "and relate it to the past."

For example, John Howard, a burly, black-mustached interpreter can tell visitors to Millbrook just what the role of a housewife or doctor or school child was back then, as compared to the same individual's place in society today. He can explain the problems of the people and how they dealt with them. Describe their entertainment, their moral views, what they ate and what they died of. He can even tell you how often the stage coach ran.

The village is open seven days a week. The first guided tour begins at 10 a.m., the last at 5:30 p.m. Picnic and toilet facilities are available.

NOSTALGIA is spelled out by this china doll resting in a washbasin in early 19th century bedroom at Millbrook Village.

First Del Callie made candy, then he learned how

By JOE RATTMAN

Pocono Record Reporter

MOUNTAINHOME — Harry "Del" Callie saw the candy shop in Bangor close down in 1952. After it was closed for three weeks he decided to try his hand at it.

He was a 19-year-old farm boy who knew nothing about making candy but he learned, still has the shop and opened a second shop in Mountainhome a few years ago. Callie delights visitors by demonstrating his candymaking and giving away free samples.

"After I made candy for 12 years, then I went to college to learn how to make candy," Callie said. He knew a lot about candymaking before going to school but now he knows the chemistry of the candymaking process and much more about the development of recipes.

And he is willing to share all that he knows with inquisitive visitors. Callie's Candy Kitchen in Mountainhome is a home that has been converted into a retail candy store with several rooms that are filled with hundreds of varieties of candy and gifts.

To one side of the store is a large room where candymaking is demonstrated. Behind the shop is a small factory where most of the candy is made. A few different types of candy are made every day.

Callie is an energetic man with a booming voice and he jokes with onlookers as he shows them how to make candy. As he works, he explains what he is doing.

Chocolate, a main component of most candy, is made using cocoa, cocoa butter, milk and sugar, he said. It is kept heated in a large vat at about 90 degrees. When it cools to about 80 degrees, it hardens.

Temperature is the most important part of chocolate candymaking, Callie said. As trays full of candy pieces are finished, they are set aside to cool. Callie gets his supply of chocolate from large manufacturers.

Part of the candymaking demonstration involves showing visitors how various foods are covered with chocolate. A machine called a chocolate "enrober" is used. It will cover small pieces of anything with chocolate.

The pieces — strawberries, orange slices, cherries, pretzels, etc. — move on a conveyor belt, passing under a waterfall of melted chocolate, and emerging at the end, where someone must remove them with a spoon to harden on a tray.

Gretchen Callie rescues strawberries from chocolate waterfall

Callie uses the enrober to cover all sorts of things: cream cheese, bananas, peaches, blueberries and nuts, for example.

He explains to his customers things about candy, such as why chocolate sometimes gets white spots and streaks in it. Ingredients of the chocolate are starting to separate when that happens but there is nothing wrong with the chocolate, Callie said.

The biggest enemy of chocolate is water rather than temperature, Callie said, and nuts get stale faster than chocolate does.

"The most fascinating candy-making of all is the hard candy," Callie said. It is made in the factory, which is closed to the public, on open fire and air force furnaces that allow faster candymaking than would otherwise be possible.

"The candy business is hard work but it is a fun business," Callie said. "In addition to the financial part of business there is a satisfaction to it because it is something you have made."

"When a guy says, 'That's good chocolate,' it kind of makes me feel good," he said. "Our theme is 'Candy is Happiness,'" Callie said. "When a guy gets a good piece of candy, he smiles."

Callie said he enjoys the creativity of "trying to please the pallets of all of our customers," the opportunity he has to meet people and the general atmosphere that goes along with being a candymaker.

Between 80 and 90 per cent of the almost 400 varieties of candy sold at Callie's Candy Kitchen are made there, Callie said. The most popular type is Pocono Mountain Bark, chocolate with pieces of nuts or fruit inside, available in 30 varieties. Lollipops of many flavors, sizes and colors are made and are displayed in their own room. One red, white and blue lollipop there measures three feet in diameter, weighs 35 pounds and sells for $50.

"It was made for the bi-centennial year," Callie said.

Callie, who started in the candy business when he was 19, now has 10 employees. His business, on Rte. 390 in Mountainhome, is a family originated operation. Two of his daughters work there and a third daughter worked there previously.

Candy sales have declined recently because of higher retail prices and poor economic conditions generally. Cocoa prices inflated sharply in recent months and have not lowered.

Callie attributed the inflation to increased demand for cocoa. He said that while demand has fallen slightly in the United States, it has increased substantially in Third World countries.

Sugar prices rose sharply and peaked last winter. The cost of sugar has "dropped practically in half from the peak around Christmas," Callie said.

Despite shortages of candy ingredients, Callie has not had trouble getting his supplies. His operation is primarily retail but he wholesales to area resorts and to fundraising charity groups.

The shop is open all year and attracts many local customers as well as tourists. The secret to sales is the free sample.

"The sample is my salesman, not the candymaker," Callie said.

Cranberry bog in the Poconos? Yes, and vital, too

By JOE RATTMAN
Pocono Record Reporter

TANNERSVILLE — Numerous small bogs and swamps occupy the lowlands of the Poconos, surrounded by the mountains that attract the area's visitors.

While the natural beauty of the forested mountains comes readily to mind, among naturalists the wetlands, especially the Cranberry bog near Tannersville, are considered particularly beautiful and valuable natural areas.

Bogs are difficult for strangers to enter and the plantlife under foot is fragile and often is comprised of rare species. The Cranberry Bog has long been of interest to conservationists.

About 20 years ago, Horace Heller, then the owner of the bog, planned to mine peat from a deposit estimated to be about 40 feet deep. William Nierling, a native of Scotrun, was studying the pollen of bog plantlife for a doctorate at the time. He was worried that removal of the peat would cause ecological damage so he spearheaded a fund raising drive to have the bog taken from private hands and permanently preserved.

Local groups, including P.T.A., Boy Scouts and civic groups, raised more than $2,000 that was used to buy the bog. The Conservancy of Nature, a national organization, became the owner and they made Lafayette College, in Easton, custodian.

But the bog remains threatened, according to several conservationists familiar with the area. Lafayette has closed the bog to visitors, saying that excessive traffic and a rising water table combine to threaten its fragile ecology.

Dr. George Learn, a Tannersville resident who teaches physics and biology at East Stroudsburg State College and is an expert on the bog, said the bog is also threatened by development of land on its perimeter.

Some delicate plants and flowers have disappeared in recent years, Learn said. It is unclear if water quality has deteriorated or to what degree it has, Learn said.

The Junior Conservation Board, a branch of the Monroe County Conservation District, is beginning to study water quality in the bog. The information gathered will enable future changes to be detected in time to allow corrective action to prevent ecological disaster, board members hope.

"By the time somebody says, 'The water stinks,' it's (the bog) irretrievably lost," Learn said. That is the importance of taking the measurements, he said.

Further, he said, the data could be ammunition for conservationists in the future if it becomes necessary to appeal to government officials for action to save the bog.

When money was raised to save the bog in 1957, a major argument fund raisers used was that the bog has value for flood protection, Learn said. Hurricane Diane, two years earlier, had caused extensive destruction to life and property. It swelled streams and creeks, washing away most bridges.

The bridges downstream of the bog remained intact because much of the bog vegetation acted as a huge sponge — a natural reservoir for the rainwater, Learn said. Memories of the flood were fresh in 1957, Learn noted.

The plant that most has the sponge-like quality is sphagnum moss. It is abundant in bogs along with sedges, shrubs, grasses, flowers and trees. Several inches of water covers the floor.

One of the things that makes the bog an unusual natural feature of the Poconos is that many of the species of plants and trees are not normally found in areas this far south.

"It's a place out of place," Learn said. The bog has three concentric zones of vegetation. Surrounding the bog, most of the trees are deciduous. Closer to the center, several species are intermixed and in the central part, most of the trees do not shed their leaves.

In one interior part of the bog, there is a two acre open section where the vegetation grows no more than waist high. Some of the most interesting plants are found there, but the area has been closed in with trees substantially in the last several decades, Learn said.

"You get a feeling when you are in there that you are walking on eggs," Learn said. There are several varieties of orchids in the bog and several types of wildflowers including snake mouth, dragon orchid, mountain yellow-eyed grass, and hare's tail.

There are cranberries and blueberries that occasionally have been harvested by local residents. However, it is extremely difficult to get into the bog and those who try to find their way to the interior have frequently had to crawl through dense underbrush.

Nevertheless, traffic into the bog increased measurably in recent years as small groups of students from colleges around eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey took field trips there.

The bog affords considerable food, cover and protection for wildlife. White-tailed deer, opossums, red foxes, raccoons, beaver, muskrat and bear, among others, are found there. Otter lived in the bog half a century ago but were driven from the Poconos area generally by civilization, Learn said.

Several thousand years ago, a glacier gouged out the surface of the earth where the bog is today, leaving a lake that eventually became the bog.

"A very small amount of open water is what is left of the glacial lake," Learn said.

Vegetation gets caught in the meshwork of water lilies that grow on the lake and it advances from the shoreline.

Slowly, the deciduous hardwoods also advance and over a long period of time the bog disappears. The character of the bog will change rapidly and unpredictably if polluted, however, and that is what concerns Learn and the members of the conservation board.

Art school gives creative dimension to summer fun

By JOE RATTMAN
Pocono Record Reporter

EAST STROUDSBURG — Some of the art students are still in high school, preparing portfolios in hopes of being accepted to a college art department, and others, some retired, are pursuing a leisure interest.

They come together at the Art School to learn painting and drawing from Snyder'sville artist Peter Cohen. The classes are small, usually from two to eight, and members vary greatly in their abilities.

"I like them small. I like to work individually with people," Cohen said. "It's almost always individual work, people working at their own level to develop their own style and skills."

Cohen, 49, teaches three classes a week, both days and evenings. Dividing the students into classes with students of differing abilities did not work out, Cohen said, because the community is not large enough.

Beginners work at painting realistic still lifes before they attempt more difficult projects. When ready, they start painting more abstractly.

"As they develop, we get more into modern techniques," Cohen said. Some of the Art School students have been studying with him for as long as three years. They buy a six-lesson ticket good for two months and attend class whenever they want. The classes are very informal.

When Cohen teaches life drawing, he lectures for about 10 minutes and then has students draw a model who changes poses frequently at first, moving after a minute or two, then poses longer, perhaps for a half hour.

The procedure forces students to learn to draw basic shapes quickly and roughly and to draw the structure of the body with more precision later.

"We always paint from life and not from picture post cards," Cohen said. "Copying may be good training but it is not creative and it's only through dealing with three dimensional reality that the person can develop his own equivalence in paint for three dimensional space."

Cohen has no favorite medium and he uses several. He paints and does murals, draws maps and has designed and built a park. About a year and a half ago he used logs and fieldstone on a tract of land in Wilderness Acres development near Marshalls Creek to make a picnic area, paths and a playground. His interests in art are varied and he spends an average of six hours daily working on art.

Classes of the Art School used to be held at Cohen's studio at home but were moved to the building of the Jack and Jill Nursery, 240 Washington St. in East Stroudsburg, because of its more convenient location. Cohen tries to help students develop their talent and all improve at their own rates.

"Talent is the ability to learn quickly," he said, "but the exceptional person learns effortlessly."

"But I don't emphasize talent because I have seen very talented people who have wasted their talent and I have seen relative plodders who made careers in art because they worked very hard at it."

Cohen himself started at the Art Institute in Chicago and has studied at the School of Painting and Sculpture in Mexico City, the Art Student's League and the New School, both in New York.

Recently, Cohen had a mural design that expressed the theme of individual freedom displayed at the National Arts Club in New York. It was a part of a show of mural designs on different aspects of American freedoms that was approved by the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission.

"I like art that expresses feelings that are hard to express in words and which somehow on a psychological or spiritual level reflect the human dilemma," Cohen said.

On Saturday mornings, Cohen teaches landscape painting. He has designed posters for groups as divergent as the Phoenix Players and the Viet Nam Veterans Against the War.

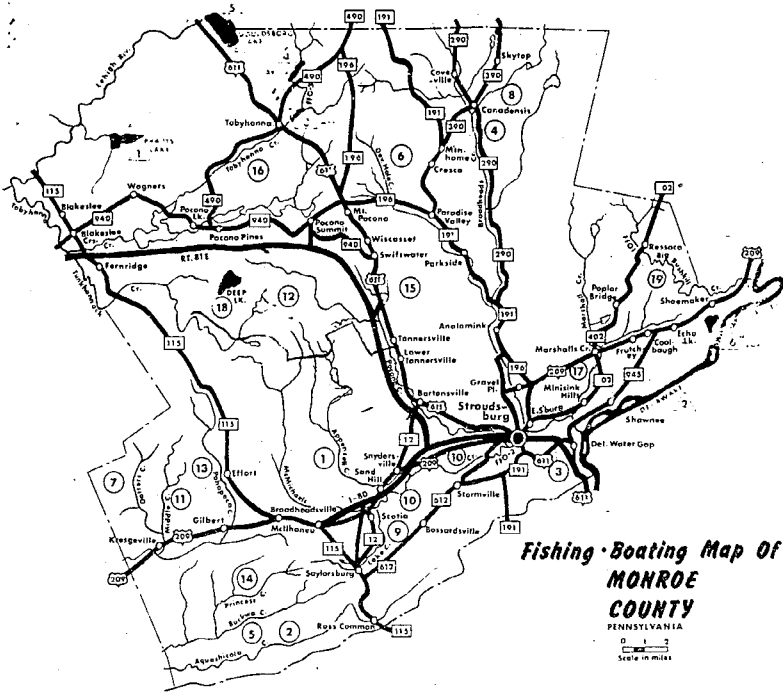

Cohen has been painting since he was 17. He had his first one-man show in 1948 at age 23. Last fall, he had a showing at the Mountain Gallery in East Stroudsburg.

An illustrated map of Monroe County was published by Cohen several years ago. It shows the roads, terrain and points of historical interest in the area. Cohen has done large murals for architects and decorators all over the United States.

A course in mural design was offered once at a Art School but none of the students were interested, Cohen said.
